Surprise entries lead WSU over Duck trackmen

Women have easy time with Cougars, 97-25

By John Healy
Of the Emerald

Oregon track coach Bill Dellinger believed the outcome of Saturday's dual meet with Washington State, last year's top-ranked dual team, would hinge on the 800, 1,500 and 5,000 meters.

If Oregon could do well in those three events, and the other events went as expected, Dellinger figured his Ducks could pull off an upset against John Chaplin's Cougars.

Dellinger looked like a psychic through the 800 and 1,500, as David Mack (1:50.11) and Jim Hill (3:41.33) posted impressive victories, respectively.

But then the intermediate hurdles and the 200 meters rolled around, events which looked like sure victories, and Chaplin turned in a pair of surprise entries.

Chaplin entered Javier Moracho, seventh in the 1980 Olympic high hurdles, in the intermediates, and the Spaniard easily won in 53.11 an event that Oregon appeared to be in a position to go 1-2 on the pre-meet form charts.

While Moracho's win hurt the Ducks, it was Chris Whitlock's win in the 200 that put the final touches on a 90-73 WSU win.

Oregon's women had an easier time of it with a 97-25 whitewash over the Cougar women.

Whitlock, known more for his abilities in the 400 (third in the Pac-10 last year), powered past Oregon's George Walcott in the last 70 meters to win a slow 200 in 21.71.

Minus Whitlock, the Cougars could very well have been swept in the 200.

Obviously, the turnaround in points was crucial. And although he didn't say it before the meet, Dellinger seemed to have an idea tucked in the back of his mind that Oregon might have problems in the intermediates and 200.

"I wasn't surprised with the results in the intermediate hurdles," Dellinger explained. "And the loss in the 200 was no big surprise with Whitlock in there."

The majority of the meet went according to form, with the Cougars piling up points in the jumps, vault and high hurdles and the Ducks winning three of the four weight events, both relays and the 100.

David Mack, after winning the 800-meters in 1:50.11, had a run-in with rival Sotirios Moutsanas of Washington State. Mack, who claimed Moutsanas elbowed him in the final turn, pushed the Cougar runner following the race.

In fact, WSU outscored Oregon 31-5 in the jumps and vault, including taking the top two places in all but the high jump.

Dellinger pointed to the absence of Oregon's top horizontal jumper — sophomore Lamar Hurd — and leading intermediate hurdler — sophomore Don Ward — as being a definite factor in the loss.

"I think one factor that affected us was Hurd and Ward hurting," Dellinger said.

"If those two had been in the meet, I think it might have turned out differently," Dellinger analyzed. "They (WSU) do have a very good dual meet team, but I'm not disappointed in this meet."

Freshman Kathy Hayes and sophomore Lynda Hughes stole the show for the Duck women. Hayes scored a victory and school record in the 3,000, while Hughes won the javelin with a school-record 184-3. The only battle Hayes faced was with the weather on the way to posting a 9:07.74 mark — more than 7 seconds better than the record set last year by Leann Warren.

Warren herself turned in a time of 2:03.11 in the 800, leading an Oregon sweep in that event. In all, the Ducks swept six of 13 events and won all but one event — the high jump.
