High water may hamper anglers

By the Associated Press

Snow, mud and high water are expected to be the biggest obstacles to anglers who venture out on the opening day of trout season in most Oregon waters next Saturday, April 24.

The heavy winter and spring snowfall could block access to several lakes that normally lure fishermen on opening day. Muddy roads also could be a problem, and high water could hamper fishing conditions on many streams.

Coastal rivers, most streams in northeastern Oregon, and a few lakes will remain closed to trout fishing until May 22. The Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife urged anglers to pick up a copy of fishing regulations that are available free where fishing licenses are sold.

The Fish and Wildlife Department plans to stock many lakes and streams, including some lakes that are open to fishing year-round. The bag limit will be five per day on most streams and 10 per day on most lakes.

In most coastal lakes, the minimum size has been reduced from 8 to 6 inches.

Here is a look at trout fishing conditions in local waters based on reports from state field biologists.

Northwest Region

Most coastal lakes are open to fishing year-round, but many will be stocked prior to April 24.

On the north coast, Gunners, Sunset, Coffenbury, Vernonia and Lost lakes will be stocked with trout. Further south, Lytle, Spring, Smith, Cape Meares, Town and Hebo lakes also are targeted for stocking.

Also scheduled to be stocked with trout are Big Creek Reservoir, north of Newport; Olalla Reservoir, near Toledo; Eckman Lake, at Waldport; and Devils Lake, east of Lincoln City.

All lakes in the Florence area already have been stocked, with the exception of Lilly Lake.

Streams in the lower Willamette River that are destined for stocking prior to opening day include the Luckiamute and Little Luckiamute rivers, Rickreal Creek, Mill Creek and Agency Creek.

Good angling is expected on the McKenzie River, which will be stocked from Hayden Bridge to Blue River. Other streams in the Eugene area scheduled for stocking are Blue River, Fall Creek, Row River, the coast and middle forks of the Willamette River, Salmon Creek and the Mohawk River.

Southwest Region

Cooper Creek, Plat I Reservoir, Loon Lake and Lake Mariue have been stocked with rainbow trout but angling has not been good due to high water. They are open to fishing year-round. All Jackson County reservoirs have been open to fishing since January, but access has been limited due to adverse weather conditions.

Lost Creek Reservoir has been stocked recently and is producing rainbow trout 10 to 12 inches in length.

Most streams won't be stocked until later in the year due to high water and heavy snow.
