

Law professor wins fellowship

An associate professor at the University's law school has been selected to receive a three-year, $30,000 Kellogg Foundation Fellowship Award.

Linda Greene, whose interest is in employment discrimination, was one of 50 recipients selected from more than 700 teachers and administrators across the nation. She is the only fellowship winner from Oregon.

The W.K. Kellogg Foundation of Battle Creek, Michigan, responding to a "recognized need for broad-gauged leaders in today's society," annually names up to 50 individuals of exceptional merit. The fellowship winners carry out non-degree, self-directed activities designed to broaden their social and intellectual sensitivity and expand their personal horizons beyond their chosen professions.

Greene has been a University faculty member since August.

MAN OF IRON
Man of Iron is more than a great film, it's an event. For the first time, a director has been successful in making an instant record of recent history, effectively explaining the course of events in Poland over the last year. One of the satisfying fusions of fiction with documentary (we see Lech Walesa in newsreel footage and as an actor). It is an accurate depiction of the turbulent co-existence of labor, the Catholic Church and Communism.
