Study links kids' aggression and TV

WASHINGTON

Television is "a violent form of entertainment" that clearly leads to aggressive behavior by children and teen-agers, a new government study concluded Wednesday.

The National Institute of Mental Health said the evidence has mounted since a 1972 Surgeon General's report first implicated television as a cause of violence by children.

"The evidence accumulated in the 1970s seems overwhelming that televised violence and aggression are positively related in children," the institute said.

Despite periodic outcries from members of Congress and citizens' groups, the study found no decrease in the level of violence on television.

"The percentage of programs containing violence has remained about the same since 1967, although the number of violent acts per program has increased," it said.

The 94-page report, "Television and Behavior: Ten Years of Scientific Progress and Implications for the Eighties," was based on a two-year review of hundreds of research studies.

The report, which focused on television entertainment, made no recommendations, but Dr. Herbert Pardes, director of the institute, said its findings have implications for parents, policymakers and the television industry.

CBS said it would not respond to the report; NBC and ABC had no immediate comment.

Skyjack note found in Hinckley's room

WASHINGTON

An airliner hijacking note saying "I have a bomb with me... a companion is with me with a firearm" was found in John Hinckley's hotel room on the day he shot Pres. Reagan 13 months ago, his jury was told Wednesday.

Also in the room was a picture postcard addressed to actress Jodie Foster in which Hinckley said "one day you and I will occupy the White House... please do your best to remain a virgin."

And there were 38 pages of Hinckley's writings, mostly poems, one of which began "Criticize you may this act of mine, I trust you'll appreciate the romantic reasons. One final stand and the poet shall die, a moment to pour out my feelings. We all abhor the end result."

There was no testimony to indicate what, if anything, Hinckley planned to do with the hijack note or when it was written.

It was found on a Band-Aid box in Hinckley's hotel room on March 30, 1981, after he wounded the president and three other men.

"This plane has been hijacked," it said. "I have a bomb with me plus flammable liquids and a knife. A companion is with me with a firearm. Act naturally and lead the way to the cabin. Stay calm."

Hurt's testimony came as the government prepared to rest its case in U.S. District Court against Hinckley for shooting the president, Press Secretary James Brady and two law enforcement officers.

Steelworkers union opens bread line

HOMESTEAD, Pa.

Laid-off steelworkers lined up for free bread, milk and canned goods Wednesday as their union opened a food bank that was financed through a benefit rock concert, raffles and donations at mill gates.

United Steelworkers pensioners volunteered their time to hand out grocery bags filled with canned meat, tuna fish, soup, beans and other canned goods for those whose jobless benefits are nearly exhausted.

"We're talking about feeding people who have nowhere else to go for help," said Mike Stout, a grievance officer for the union.

"We want to make sure people at least can get by and at least have something to eat to ride through this crisis."

Nearly a third of the 7,000 workers at U.S. Steel Corp.'s Homestead Works have lost their jobs.

About two dozen men and women, some accompanied by their children, waited in the hallway of a vacated school building in this blue-collar town east of Pittsburgh for the 10 a.m. opening of the food bank.

"We're in a soup line," said Jim Davis of Homestead, who was laid off after having worked for 26½ years.

"I lose all my manhood to do this," said the 50-year-old Davis, hefting two bags of groceries for his family. "But what can I do? You have to eat. It's very bad, and it's not getting any better."

Union officials expected to hand out 250 to 300 bags of groceries on opening day. Distribution will continue once a week until food supplies are gone.

The union is planning more concerts and other events to keep the food bank going.

Catch their eye first.

First impressions are very important. Your resume says who you are before the interviewers even see you.

If your resume can catch their eye and hold their attention just a little longer than the others, if it stands out on a crowded desk, then you've got your foot in the door so you can speak for yourself.

A resume professionally produced by the Oregon Daily Emerald Jobwork Department gives you the visual edge you'll need to make a favorable first impression and to stand up to the competition.
