Layoffs

The district's budget committee has adopted the service and staff reductions, but decisions still must be reached on capital improvement proposals and other portions of the budget, he says.

The budget committee meets again May 25 and is expected to send the budget to the board of directors for final approval sometime in June.

"We don't know when they'll (laid-off workers) be called back or if they will be called back," Bergeron says, adding that further layoffs are still possible as the budget process continues.

The Amalgamated Transit Union, which represents LTD's non-management employees, isn't happy about the layoffs.

Hank Perry, executive board officer for the union local, says the district needs to "straighten out its priorities."

"We don't understand why the service has to be cut," Perry says.

He says the budget committee is considering spending as much as $327,000 to widen the sidewalks and to build a new customer service center on the downtown mall "and at the same time, laying off people." That money could be used to keep the same service and staff levels, he says.

"It just doesn't make any sense to us."

Bergeron says the public has requested the downtown improvements for about 10 years, and the budget committee has received no testimony from the public to the contrary.

In fact, "no one has testified on anything," Bergeron says.

Perry also says that employment of management personnel has increased while employment of bus drivers and related workers has declined in the past few years.

Perry says the laid-off workers are "pretty bitter."

Laid-off workers will have recall rights for one year, and the union will help the workers find jobs with other transit services, such as Tri Met in Portland, he says.

The union has no plans for a strike or slowdown because that action would be "counter-productive" for public employees, Perry says.

"Our main charge is to carry people from one place to another. That's what we're here for," he says. "It's not to do all these things (downtown improvements) when times are lean."

Wendy's

OUR BEEF IS ALL-AMERICAN

At Wendy's, we believe in the quality of American beef.

That's why we've never allowed imported beef. Not once in our entire history.

That's why we've never allowed frozen beef. Not once in our entire history.

Wendy's hamburgers are made from only 100% pure,

Government inspected, American beef.

When we first started Wendy's with one restaurant, we set standards in the industry that no one has ever topped.

And we've never abandoned those standards.

Not once in our entire history.

That's why we've been saying, there "ain't no reason to go anyplace else."
