Duck women face tough test

By Mike Riplinger
Of the Emerald

Oregon missing a few, however

The Oregon women's track team will face its sternest test of the season when it enters the Pacific Coast Invitational in Berkeley, California today and Saturday.

Teams from 17 clubs and universities are entered including Florida State, California, Stanford, Oregon State, UTEP, and Cal Poly-San Luis Obispo.

The Ducks won't be at full strength for the meet, because, like just about everyone else on campus, they have been hit by a case of the flu. Grace Bakari, Robin Pate and Kathy Hayes will all miss the meet because of the virus. Jeanne Borchardt is also out with a foot injury, and Lexie Miller is out with a leg strain.

They will find plenty of competition in Berkeley. In an effort to take everyone who qualified for the meet, Oregon coach Tom Heinonen took only half of his athletes who qualified for last week's NCWSA regional to Missoula, Montana.

meet up with Stanford's Regina Jacobs (2:05) and California's Louise Romo (2:04).

"Leann is still feeling sub-par from that virus, so we're just going day-by-day for her training and racing," said Heinonen. Javelin throwers, Lynda Hughes (188-4), Sally Harmon (169-10) and Roz Rouse (166-2) will find plenty of competition in Cal Poly's Karin Smith, the nation's top thrower last year, who has already had a heave of 211-3 this season.

Hughes and Harmon will also head down to Los Angeles Sunday afternoon, to compete in the UCLA-Pepsi Invitational.

"The Pacific Coast Invitational will give us our final sharpening for the NCAAs," said Oregon coach Tom Heinonen who will take his team to Provo, Utah in two weeks for the NCAA meet.

"We had a solid team showing at regionals, but what we're needing right now is some top-flight competition, and that's exactly what we'll get this weekend," Heinonen said.

After easily winning regionals last week, Heinonen won't have any trouble finding competition in Berkeley.

Florida State will have the world-leading (44.34) 400-meter relay team and the nation-leading 1,600-meter relay. The Seminoles, who tied the Ducks for third last year at the AIAW nationals, will also be bringing 100-meter hurdler, Carolyn Faison, who has consistently been under 14.00.

Chris Costello will have plenty of competition with Faison in the hurdles, but the favorite will definitely be Stephanie Hightower, the former Ohio State standout who was ranked fourth in the world last year.

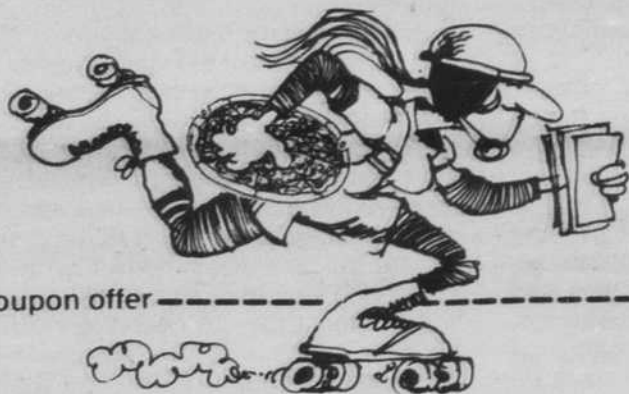

Oregon's Leann Warren will be trying to fight off the effects of a severe, early season virus in the 800 meters, where she will

'Low key' Twilight meet on tap for men's squad

The Oregon men's track team takes a break of sorts this weekend, with most of the Ducks entered in Saturday's Twilight meet at Hayward Field.

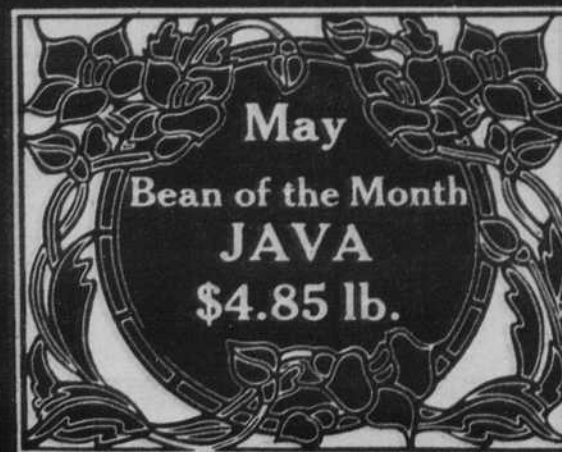

The single exception is junior Dean Crouser, who is scheduled to compete in the discus at the California Relays on Saturday in Modesto, Calif., and then at the Pepsi Invitational in Los Angeles on Sunday.

Oregon head coach Bill Dellinger plans to move the rest of the Ducks around Saturday at the Twilight meet, entering them in events they don't normally compete in. The emphasis will be "low key," says Dellinger, because with the Pac-10 championships only a week away, Dellinger doesn't want his athletes peaking before the conference meet.

It may be hard to convince Jim Hill to take it easy Saturday, as the Oregon junior hasn't lost a race at 1,500 or 5,000 meters this year. He will be entered in the Twilight Mile, along with former Olympic steeplechaser Doug Brown, ex-Oregon runner Don Clary and Dan Aldridge, formerly of Cal-Irvine. All three are now affiliated with Athletics West.

The meet will draw most of its entrants from Oregon, the Oregon Track Club and Athletics West.
