ASUO deadline extended, few women have applied

Applications for ASUO vice presidents, directors and administrative assistants will be accepted until Tuesday, May 18 in Suite 4 of the EMU.

The deadline has been extended because an unrepresentative number of women and minorities have applied for the various ASUO positions, according to ASUO Pres.-elect C.J. Balfe.

"An overwhelming amount of males have applied," Balfe said. Very few women have applied, though they are just as qualified, he said.

"Women give a different perspective and you need that input," he said.

So far, four women and 15 men have applied.

Any background at all in administration or the ASUO student government is an important qualification, Balfe says.

Balfe's selection staff will begin interviewing applicants on Monday and will continue through the week. All selections should be made by the end of May, Balfe says.

Jester Hairston takes credit for composing "Amen," a well known spiritual.

Black music celebrated

About 180 people got a taste of historical black music Wednesday in conductor/composer Jester Hairston's Negro Spiritual Workshop.

Hairston gave the historical background of each song, explaining that many spirituals are linked to slavery and so have a beat that is conducive to working. After he sang each song to the audience, they sang it back to him.

The Black Student Union brought Hairston to the University as part of the Black Arts Festival which continues throughout May.

Weekend pow-wow

The 14th annual Native American pow-wow, featuring 100 dancers in full costume, will continue today through Sunday.

"We're trying to give people an insight into Indian culture — show them something they wouldn't normally be able to see," says Greg Archuleta, co-director of the University Native American Student Union, which sponsors this weekend's pow-wow.

Traditional American Indian dancing and drumming will be featured throughout the event, and a wide variety of authentic American Indian crafts and foods will be sold.

There will be no charge for the pow-wow, which begins 8 p.m. Friday at McArthur Court. Dancers from tribes throughout the Pacific Northwest, Alaska, and the Southwest will compete for prizes of Pendleton blankets.

Saturday's activities run from noon to midnight. Among that day's scheduled events are a gourd dance in the style of the Oklahoma plains tribes, which begins at 6 p.m., and an Eskimo dance at 9 p.m.
