

Measure 4 taxes gas to help roads

By Brad Berton
Of the Emerald

Ballot measure 4, asking Oregonians to approve an increased gasoline tax and weight per mile truck tax to pay for road maintenance, is like the Fram oil filter commercials, says the Lane County Public Works director. Whereas the ad says "pay me now or pay me later," Don LaBelle says that "if we don't maintain roads now, we won't be able to afford to repair them in the future."

If the measure passes Tuesday, the eight cents the state currently charges on each gallon of gasoline sold to non-commercial vehicles would increase by one cent per year over the next three years as well, beginning in July.

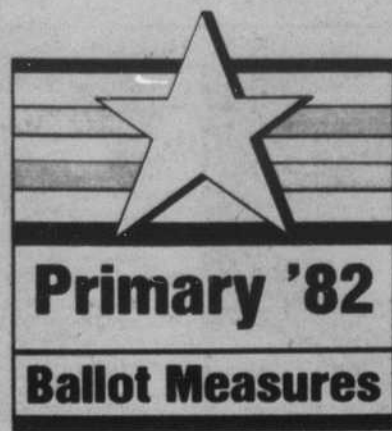

The measure would also increase the tax that truck and commercial vehicles pay the state. This tax, based on the weight of the vehicles and the miles they travel within the state, would increase by an average of 12.5 percent on July 1, 1982, and by 11.1 and 10 percent on the same day in 1983 and 1984, respectively.

The additional tax will generate about $21 million each year for the next three years, according to the legislative argument.

In accordance with Oregon's constitution, these tax revenues can be used only for repair, improvement, operation and construction of state and local roads. Cities would continue to receive 12 percent of the funds and counties 20 percent, while 68 percent would be used for state roads.

Measure supporters in the state legislature argue that poor roads discourage business and add to driving costs. And conclusions from a recent Oregon road survey show increasing traffic levels and declining fuel consumption (due to more fuel-efficient cars), making tax revenues decrease while the need for them grows.

As quoted in the Oregon voters' pamphlet, The Road Information Program, which recently surveyed Oregon's road conditions, concluded that 20,000 miles of Oregon's roads are substandard, and that 14,000 of these miles are "well-traveled," because 56 percent of the driving in Oregon takes place on these roads.

TRIP also noted that over 17,000 miles of county and city roads need resurfacing or reconstruction, and that 8,000 miles of cracked or broken roads should be resurfaced soon before they need to be rebuilt. Rebuilding costs, they add, are over three times as much as resurfacing.
