British seize peak overlooking Stanley

EAST FALKLAND ISLAND

British troops captured the high ground overlooking the Falklands capital of Stanley Tuesday, putting them within artillery range of Argentines dug in for the showdown battle of the undeclared war, British press reports said.

The Argentine commander on the islands, Brig. Gen. Mario Benjamin Menendez, exhorted his soldiers to fight with "valor and heroism" and beat the British "in such a way that their defeat is so crushing they will never again dare to invade our land."

Press Association, Britain's domestic news agency, said British marines and paratroopers captured 1,535-foot Mount Kent, 12 miles west of Stanley, and were battling along Two Sisters, a ridge three miles closer to the port town. London's Independent Radio News exclaimed the British "almost certainly" had won control of the Two Sisters ridge.

Argentina's military command indirectly acknowledged the British had taken Mount Kent but said they had been unable to advance. It also claimed a British Harrier jet was shot down near Stanley.

Navy Capt. Enrique de Leon, spokesman for the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said Argentine bombers made a pre-dawn attack and "as a result of the bombing, British forces stayed on Mount Kent. They have not passed Mount Kent." He was asked about the report of the Two Sisters fighting and said there was no combat by ground forces

Tuesday.

De Leon said British warships shelled the peninsula on which Stanley is located Tuesday morning but were driven off by Argentine shore fire. He also repeated the claim, adamantly denied by the British, that the aircraft carrier Invincible was damaged in an attack Sunday.

Britain said there was "an attempted attack" on the war fleet but "not one of our ships was hit." British reports later said two of the devastating Exocet missiles launched by Super Etendard warplanes had been destroyed as they approached the fleet.

U.S. intelligence sources in Washington, who asked not to be named, backed the British claim, asserting that the fleet defenders had shot down one or more of the French-made Exocets.

Press Association's correspondents, who are regularly briefed at the Defense Ministry in London, said fewer than 10 British soldiers were wounded and none killed in the fighting for 1,535-foot Mount Kent, 12 miles west of Stanley. Some Argentines were reported killed.

That would put part of the estimated 4,000-man British force, reportedly backed by 3,500 infantrymen landed from the liner Queen Elizabeth 2, within nine miles of the defense perimeter established by some 7,000 Argentine troops.

The British Defense Ministry said a Sea Harrier fighter shot down an Argentine C-130 Hercules transport 50 miles north of the Falklands as it apparently attempted to ferry supplies to the beleaguered Argentine garrison at Stanley.

Britain's Defense Ministry said 250 Argentine soldiers were killed in the battle for Darwin-Goose Green, and that 17 British paratroopers died in the fighting. This raised the death toll to 674 Argentines and 138 Britons.

Argentine communiques claim Argentine forces had destroyed 25 British Harrier jets, destroyed or damaged seriously 22 helicopters and sunk or seriously damaged 19 to 20 "enemy" war vessels, including an aircraft carrier, five destroyers, 10 or 11 frigates, two landing boats and a container ship with planes aboard.
