Seniors give to library

Despite today's tight budgets, some University students are dipping into their pocketbooks to establish a fund that will benefit the University Library.

The Class of 1982, in conjunction with the University Foundation, has undertaken "Library: Project 1982," a fundraising campaign to help the financially plagued library. To date, the fund has grown to more than $3,500 in donations and pledges.

"This is the first time since 1969 that a graduating class has left a gift to the University," says Matt Schermerhorn, student coordinator of the project for the sponsoring Student University Relations Council. "The project is a positive way for students to support higher education in these budget-cutting times."

Schermerhorn explained that contributions received for the project will be set aside as an endowment. The interest on this capital will be used to purchase books that will enhance the quality of the library's holdings. "The purchases will directly benefit the students and the faculty members who follow us," he said.

The class of 1982 is asking graduating seniors to contribute to the fund by returning pledge cards already distributed to them through the mail. Additional cards are available from the Office of University Relations, 11 Susan Campbell Hall, University of Oregon, Eugene, OR 97403.

The project's goal is to have every senior contribute $12.50 yearly over a three-year period beginning in the spring of 1983. Contributions of any size will be accepted.

Smoking clinic offered

Six-week programs to help smokers quit — permanently — will be offered at the University beginning this summer.

The summer program starts June 28.

Karen McIntyre, program coordinator, calls the seminar a "highly effective, proven program."

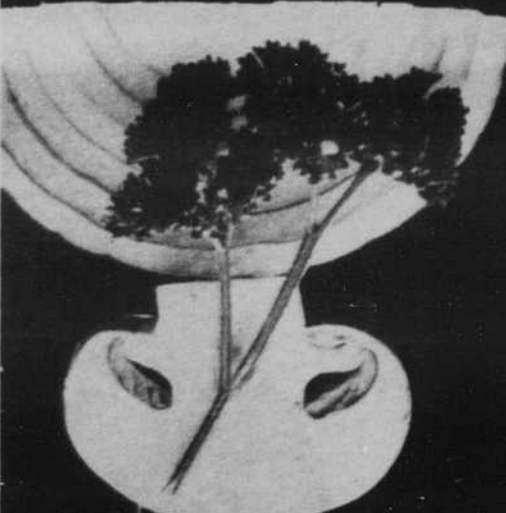

To be eligible to participate, smokers must have a spouse or living partner who is willing to attend the program. Partners who are smokers are not required to quit to participate.

The program costs $15 per client. In addition, a $25 refundable deposit will be collected.

Interviews for the summer program will be held Monday through Thursday.

To arrange an interview, and for more information, interested smokers should call Karen McIntyre or Robin Mermelstein at 686-4903 by Thursday. Space is limited.
