

Music in the air

Eugene Parks and Recreation presents a panorama of over 100 free summer concerts and performances. With the concerts the Cultural Arts Division of Parks and Recreation hopes to reach the "untraditional concert goer by bringing concerts where those folks might show up," says Suzanne Pepin, the division supervisor.

The summer entertainment began June 13 at the Rhododendron Garden in Hendricks Park with an appearance by Eugene's Emerald Chamber Players. It runs through August 29.

The 47 concerts and performances are scheduled to include folk, jazz, and rock, plus occasional mime, dance, and juggling shows.

Sunday performances will be at Hendricks, Monroe, University, Washburne and Westmoreland Parks. The Thursday evening performances will take place in Amazon Park.

Concerts with amplified music will be held only in Skinner Butte Park. This is to prevent any disturbance amplified music might cause in residential areas.

The schedule, now available at Parks and Recreation community centers throughout Eugene and at the main office, includes frequent appearances by the Chamber Players, a concert with the Northwest's Whiskey Creek Band, a "contra-dance" with the Oregon Country Dance Orchestra, a Folk Festival and Spaghetti Feed, among other activities.

Summer Showcase's Seventh season, managed by the Lane Regional Arts Council, opened on June 14 and continues through Sept. 9.

The free performances start each weekday at noon. They feature a wide range of entertainment ranging from mimes Bimbo and Kazoo, guitarist Gary Parks, jazz dance group Oslund and Company jazz dance, to folk musicians The Tree People, among others.

To secure performances from Musician's Association performers, who are more highly paid than unaffiliated performers, Parks and Recreation matched funds from union Local No. 689 to co-sponsor 10 concerts. In addition, the Eugene Folklore Society is co-sponsoring nine performances. Parks and Recreation is putting city room tax funds toward financing the events.
