Sessions focus on sexual harassment

A two-day workshop discussing the causes and possible remedies for sexual harassment starts today at 12:30 p.m. in EMU 167.

The subject matter of the conference is keeping with the University's recent proposals dealing with sexual harassment on campus, says Marcia Kraus, of the Women's Referral and Resource Service.

Helen Remick, a leading researcher on sexual harassment from the University of Washington, will open the workshop with a keynote address covering "the nuts and bolts of sexual harassment," Kraus says.

Other sessions covering sexual harassment and the law, the unions and the workplace, will take place today and Wednesday in the EMU's Forum

Room. A film, "Workplace Hustle," shows at 2:30 p.m. Wednesday, with a men's panel on sexual harassment at 3:30 p.m.

"I think the workplace pays the most attention (to sexual harassment) because it costs them," Kraus says. Businesses lose good employees and profits with the turnover caused by sexual harassment on the job, she explains.

"Unions are paying attention to (sexual harassment) a lot" for the same reasons, Kraus adds.

For more information about the conference, contact the Women's Referral and Resource Service at 686-3327.
