Branches of the library

By David Steinmetz
Of the Emerald

A hike in the Cascades, a new apartment to decorate, or just a desire to learn about a new-found strain of virus are all reason enough to visit one of the many branch libraries of the University.

Most of the library material is of course located in the main library, 273,000 volumes and other materials are housed in five branch libraries located in various schools around the campus.

Branch libraries such as the Architecture and Allied Arts Library, the Science Library, and the Mathematics Library carry the more specialized material in those fields. The collections are directed towards students majoring in those fields of study.

come in for a variety of reasons related to finding the aerial distribution of something, according to Susan Trevitt-Clark, Map Library administrative assistant.

Fishing, hunting, hiking, and overseas trips may be researched here, and even geneologists and small businesses use the facilities.

Most of the 250,000 maps in the library can be checked out for two weeks.

The library's collection of 300,000 air photos and 2,300 atlases, which are not loaned, make this map library the largest in Oregon as well as the nation.

Still more of these materials are available through the inter-library loan system. The Map Library is a member of the system.

Areas of strength for the library include Oregon, Central America, Eastern Europe, Africa and Japan, according to Trevitt-Clark.

This "fairly well-rounded" collection has been developed in spite of a seemingly insufficient
