

Saturday Market: pasta to pottery

By Hank Trotter
Of the Emerald

Does the prospect of another Saturday sitting in front of the dorm television have you bored?

Then how about a sampling of everything from pasta and pizza to pottery and pillows, all handmade with a commitment to quality.

You'll find it at downtown Eugene's Saturday Market, located at Seventh Avenue and Oak Street.

At the county parking lot turned marketplace, a typical Saturday will find you tasting delicious tempura vegetables and calzoni pizza, with a smoothie to wash it all down and a tempting piece of cheesecake for a finale.

You can sit and enjoy the scheduled reggae, jazz or folk music and laugh at the antics of spontaneous performances of mimes and jugglers.

After a filling meal and rousing entertainment, some 200 colorful booths brimming with handmade goods are lined up for leisurely browsing.

Then, a quick snack of quiche before you walk across the street to the Farmer's Market, an offshoot of Saturday Market. There, local produce can be purchased or free kittens picked up.

"It's a celebration of creativity," Ilene English, assistant manager of the market, says of Eugene's unique open air crafts and foods fair.

"Artisans can meet the consumer face to face," English says. "The consumer can share the excitement of the work with it's creator."

Begun in 1970 as a meeting place for local craftspeople and consumers, Saturday Market has since grown into a tradition with many successful offshoots. English credits Saturday Market for the drive behind Fifth Street Public Market, Portland Saturday Market, Blair Island restaurant and many other businesses in Eugene.

"Many of these hippies have grown into respectable businessmen," English says of the market's original vendors.

Though a broader range of people are now beginning to enjoy the Saturday Market's pleasant sights, sounds and smells, the market has left its founding ideals intact. Everything must still be handmade of completely natural materials.

For the vendors, it's a chance to show their wares and to socialize with other artisans. "The market becomes like a family," English says. "There is a real good feeling that goes around."
