Kevin Willhite gives Dana Hill a "low five" after listening to Oregon pull ahead of Washington 21-17 in the fourth quarter on the radio, as the two freshmen walk away from the Oregon International Track and Field Meet at Hayward Field Saturday. Willhite is red-shirting after injuring his hamstring, while Hill missed Saturday's action after being suspended for a week for missing a team meeting.

The Oregon offense was able to move the football against the Huskies all game long. The Ducks were able to keep the Huskies off balance with the passing of Kevin Lusk and the running of Jones, Ladarja Johnson and Mike Jorgensen.

Washington, though, was able to do the same, Brooks said.

"They were really quite diversified on offense," he said. "That's the most diversified I have ever seen a Washington offense."

"It was a very physical football game," Brooks said matter-of-factly. "There were some awfully hard hits out there."

"Mike Jorgensen did a heck of a job while he was in there," Brooks said. "Kevin also did a hell of a job until those last two interceptions. I thought they both executed things we haven't seen in the first three games. We moved the ball well, I thought."

And now, for the question of the moment. Are the Washington Huskies a legitimate No. 1-ranked football team?

"I voted for them last week as No. 1 and I will vote for them again this week," Brooks said. "I think they have an outstanding football team. They know how to mix it up. They executed all different types of plays against us."

There are others who may not think of the Huskies as a top-ranked college football team, but as just another tough Pac-10 football foe.

"I'll admit they are a good team but they sure didn't seem to hit like a No. 1 team should hit," said Jones, who carried the ball 14 times for 64 yards and a beautifully-executed 22-yard touchdown run. "I just didn't think they were that tough."
