Israel plans troop pull out

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Israeli troops will withdraw next Wednesday from Moslem West Beirut and the international airport south of the Lebanese capital, the military command announced Sunday.

The Foreign Ministry said the pullback from Christian East Beirut would take a bit longer.

It was the first time Israel had set a date for a pullout from the Moslem sector of Beirut. The announcement came a day after 400,000 Israelis attended the largest anti-government demonstration in Israel's 34-year history.

Speakers at the rally called for full troop withdrawal from Beirut, the resignations of Prime Minister Menachem Begin and Defense Minister Ariel Sharon and a judicial inquiry into the recent massacre of hundreds of Palestinian refugees in camps guarded by Israelis.

The Reagan administration has been demanding an Israel troop withdrawal since the massacre by Lebanese Christian militiamen 10 days ago.

An estimated 800 U.S. Marines had been scheduled to land in Beirut Sunday to join French and Italian peacekeeping troops in an effort to help the Lebanese government assert its authority. But U.S. special envoy Philip C. Habib told Sharon on Saturday that the Marines would not go ashore until Israel withdrew its forces from all of Beirut.

The White House issued a statement later saying, "We expect the U.S. contingent to land soon after the Israelis complete their withdrawal following the intervening Yom Kippur holiday."

Israel's military command announced the withdrawal timetable a few hours before the Jewish state shut down at sunset for the Day of Atonement, the holiest day on the Hebrew calendar. Israel radio and television went off the air in mid-afternoon, traffic cleared from the streets, Ben-Gurion airport closed and devout Jews went to synagogue and began a day-long fast.

Begin has scheduled a Cabinet meeting for Tuesday, after Yom Kippur.

Israel radio predicted that Begin would have to give in to pressure for a full-scale inquiry into Israel's role in the massacre because five of the 20 members of his Cabinet had rejected the government's proposal of a more informal investigation.

Justice Minister Moshe Nisim was quoted in the daily newspaper Maariv as saying a judicial inquiry "now seems inevitable."

Meanwhile, in Lebanon, state television said Sunday that President Amin Gemayel is expected to go to New York sometime in October to address the U.N. General Assembly.
