Host program helps students from overseas

University News Bureau

People interested in hosting University students from abroad are encouraged to sign up for the annual "Friendship Family Program" operated by the Foreign Student Friendship Foundation.

According to Liz Litchman, an adviser in the University international services office, the foundation "promotes international understanding and world friendship by encouraging intercultural activities."

Friendship families are expected to provide a foreign student with opportunities to gain an understanding of American culture.

Litchman suggests helping orient students when they first arrive, inviting them to dinner, accommodating them as guests in their homes, taking them on excursions to points of interest in the state and helping them adjust to life in Eugene.

"Close to 200 students from 75 countries are coming in for fall term," Litchman says, "and more than half have already been assigned families."

Litchman says no financial obligation is involved. For further information, phone Litchman at 686-3206.

Student guides give free tours

University News Bureau

Guided walking tours of the University campus are offered Monday through Friday to the general public.

The free one-hour tours depart at 10:30 a.m. and 7:30 p.m. from the Oregon Hall information desk.

During the tours, student guides point out many buildings and facilities incorporated within the 250-acre campus.

Tour formats are informal in nature, which allows participants to concentrate on areas of campus where their academic interests lie.
