Clenching your teeth and bearing the temporary pain of a shot is much better than being laid-up for a week with the flu. That's not what this anxious student is thinking facing the needle. Shots are offered three times a week at the Health Center.

Ouch!

Flu fearers can acquire vaccinations

The flu season is close at hand — even though the occasional sunny weather makes that hard to believe. And people afraid of the flu bug's bite can take advantage of flu vaccinations offered by the Student Health Center.

Students should be especially wary of catching the flu. That time spent snuffing and coughing and being generally miserable is time better spent studying. The health center is offering the shots three days a week, Wednesday, Thursday or Friday between the hours of 8 and 9 a.m. until the end of fall term.

Dr. Jim Jackson of the health center says it's prudent for people with asthma, diabetes, tuberculosis, heavy smokers and those over 65 should have the shots.

Student fees don't cover the cost of the flu shots. A nominal fee of $2.50 for students and $3.50 for faculty and staff is required.

CSPA confers before demise

The transition of programs from the Wallace School of Community Service and Public Affairs to different University departments will be the main focus of a conference on Saturday.

The conference, which starts at 9 a.m. in the EMU, features workshops on public service. Workshops will cover media and public relations for nonprofit and governmental organizations, dealing with agency employees during time of uncertainty and cutback, using microcomputers in public service and social work with families.

Larry Mann, head of the public policy and planning department at the University of Arizona, and Ronald Dear, associate professor in the College of Social Work at the University of Washington will give the luncheon speeches. They will discuss trends in professional education for public service and human services. The lunch is in Room 108 of the EMU.

A panel discussion of "What Happened to CSPA" will follow the luncheon speeches.

This fourth annual meeting of CSPA alumni has been expanded to include urban and regional planning department alumni, current students, faculty and the public. For more information contact Kathy Tri at 686-5232.
