

Furniture designs win national prizes

University students won awards for the first time since 1974 at the biannual International Woodworking Fair held in Louisville, Kentucky September 10-14.

The exposition, primarily for commercial entries, also hosted a section for student competition in which interior architecture majors Michael McDonald and Martha Clarkson entered their designs.

McDonald's entry of a black leather lounge chair pulled two first place awards. The $500 prize money from both Best of Show and Upholstered Furniture categories helps pay for the chair which cost about $750, estimates McDonald.

Clarkson says she may have had an advantage in the show because the theme of the show was "Small Living in the Eighties." Her compact, two-drawer game table with an inlaid tile checkerboard top drew the first prize, also worth $500, for the Occasional Furniture category.

Participation in the fair was optional, but to enter the students had to design and manufacture their entries for the contest in a successive three-term class. The entrants were also required to submit a series of plans, sketches and drawings prior to the actual competition.

China census shows 1 billion — more or less

PEKING (AP) — China announced Wednesday it has more than 1 billion people, counted by 5.1 million census takers who roamed everywhere from Shanghai's teeming streets to the outer reaches of Tibet for four months.

First results of the census, announced by the official Xinhua News Agency, also showed the world's most populous nation has grown since the last head-count in 1964 by 313 million people — about 86 million more than the entire U.S. population.

The Communist government said the mainland population is 1,008,175,288, and that the population of Taiwan, Hong Kong and the Portuguese colony of Macao was 23,707, 223, for a total of 1,031,882,511.

China regards Taiwan as a renegade province controlled by the rival Nationalists, who fled the mainland after the Communist civil-war victory in 1949. The government also considers Hong Kong and Macao to be part of China.

No other country has a population approaching 1 billion. India, the world's second most populous nation, has an estimated 700 million residents.

Foreign experts said the figures indicate China is making progress in birth control, and that population growth currently is 1.4 percent a year.

The stated objective of China's top leader Deng Xiaoping is to reach zero-population growth.
