people, not fragmentation."

"One party is all we need. Now, I'm not saying that I should be the only candidate in that party, that would be egocentric." Even so, "I think I could do a pretty good job, especially after 18 years of practice," Holden says.

The crisis Holden perceives is a geometric increase in man's destruction of the Earth. The next 20 years will be ultimately important in deciding our fate and will require individual political action, he says.

Holden says he has been encouraging people through his seminars and lectures to run for office regardless of their previous political experience.

"If you were to talk to people on this campus I'm sure that 80 to 90 percent don't care what is happening in the political environment," he says. "I think that is irresponsible. We have to start getting involved. We need a humanitarian government sympathetic to human needs."

Holden credits such institutions as "organized religion" and public education for conditioning the mind. Holden has experienced teaching within the public education system and believes we are "putting the mind to sleep."

By discouraging creative thinking we are in effect placing a rock on future growth, he says.

"I realize what I am working against. I'm not a visionary. I am a realist, not an idealist. People thought it idealistic to go to the moon. But, you have to start to turn (your) vision into actuality."

Holden is now contacting individuals at the grassroots level he feels would be empathic to his campaign. Many of these people are in "New Age" and spiritual groups. In Eugene, Holden spoke before such groups as Greenpeace and the Foundation of Universal Unity.

The traditional media has also been fairly receptive in Eugene — he has been on three television stations and six radio programs, as well as being featured in an article in the Springfield News.

The Theosophical Library of Springfield sponsored his stay in the area.

Holden says he is able to live on $200 to $300 a month with the help of such organizations. But the rigors of his odyssey are manifested most clearly on his body, not his wallet.

Press photos of Holden from the beginning of the campaign show a healthy, plump man, but after six months on the road, he now has pronounced cheek bones and an almost emaciated body.
