

School of education receives alumni gift

The University's education school has received a $25,000 gift annuity for its summer program for gifted children from Robert and Ruth Walker of Grants Pass.

The Walker's gift, which will be distributed as a fixed annual allowance, will go toward the future support of the Summer Enrichment Program for Gifted and Talented Students, according to Clifton Cole, director of planned giving for the University Foundation.

When the money becomes available, it will be used for scholarships for economically disadvantaged students, says George Sheperd, professor of education and program coordinator.

The summer program is self-supporting and has very limited resources for scholarships, and many qualified students have been unable to attend.

Children who demonstrate superior ability or potential in one or more areas of educational achievement, intellectual ability, creative and productive thinking, leadership and the visual and performing areas we eligible for the program.

Over the year, the Walkers have given gifts to the University in excess of $325,000, both for scholarships based on merit and for the library. In 1980, the Walkers, both University alumni, established a $75,000 annuity trust to meet the library's most pressing needs.

LERC receives grant

The University Labor Education and Research Center, which trained 2,000 persons in identifying and correcting hazards in the workplace last year, will continue its work with a new $70,000 grant.

This is the fourth year LERC has been funded by the federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration, according to Emory Via, the center's director.

The money, from OSHA's "New Directions" program, supports LERC's Occupational Safety and Health Project. Training is offered throughout the Northwest.

"We are encouraged by this new grant, which keeps us among the top three University labor programs, nationally, receiving 'New Directions' funds," Via says. The total support from OSHA over four years have been $680,000.

In addition to training some 2,000 employees of Northwest firms through 50 workshops and programs, LERC last year provided "substantial technical assistance to reduce hazards for certain high-hazard groups," Via says.

LERC recently started a series of taxation workshops exploring the idea that unions are involved in the political process. LERC also is planning a workshop discussing labor and the media in December.

During the past four years, LERC has held programs for more than 200 unions and other organizations to train stewards, safety committee members and other officials in identifying and correcting hazards from toxic chemicals, physical stress and machines.

Marital studies mends marriages

Couples who wish to enhance their relationships can find help and encouragement through the Oregon Marital Studies Program.

"We see couples for both individual therapy and for couple workshops," says Kendra Summers, graduate student in clinical psychology who works in the program. "Therapy is for couples who are in distress and workshops are for those couples who are in trouble and would like to see their relationship improved."

The program, part of the University psychology department, will set up an initial meeting to determine whether the couple needs individual therapy or workshops.

If the couple needs individual sessions, the therapist will develop a special plan to solve the couple's particular problems.

Couples meet weekly for about three months. The next program begins Nov. 30 and costs $20.

The workshops deal with communication skills, problem-solving skills and how couples can become more supportive of each other. Couples also are instructed how to maintain those changes.
