Career center offers help

Teaches skills, offers information to job hunters

By FRANK SHAW

"We're here to help students and alumni who are in the process of deciding what kind of careers they want to pursue and to help them find employment," says Larry Smith, head of the University's Career Planning and Placement Center.

But, he says, "We are not an employment agency."

To help students decide what they want to do, the placement center offers a variety of workshops, classes and seminars.

A "Job Outlook for the 80s" seminar deals with the expected job growth in specific industries and how those predictions affect students.

The "Career Planning Seminar" is designed for students with tentative or undeclared majors. It discusses skills, activities and interests to help students make career decisions.

The placement center even offers a class for credit, Counseling 199.

The class is designed for undergraduates making career decisions. It deals with a student's abilities, interests and values, the social and psychological characteristics of the work environment and skills for locating resources.

The best time to meet people and make job contacts is during the sophomore year, Smith says. A student's freshman year is too early because the student's main concern is adjusting to University life, he says.

Career decisions should not be made lightly, Smith says. "The people who have made decisions about what they want to do will have to test them."

Students who are undecided about what career they want to pursue should use some of the standardized interest tests and inventories, Smith says. Among these tests is the Strong-Campbell Career Interest Inventory, a computerized career identification system and a self-directed search.

Undecided students should also participate in career information fairs and afternoon-on-the-job sessions, Smith says.

These programs give students an idea of what types of jobs and careers they might be interested in. If a student thinks he might be interested in hotel management, for example, he or she could participate in a trip to Valley River Inn for an introduction to that career.

Another opportunity for students to gain first-hand experience in their career field comes through various student groups and organizations.

Smith says campus living groups can provide positions of leadership, improve organizational skills and give training in financial management.

When should you begin your job search after you've got all this experience and advice? Smith recommends that seniors begin actively seeking employment during the first quarter of their senior year. The placement center offers workshops, job search strategies, resume writing classes and other classes designed to enable students to find themselves jobs.

One of the most popular and useful resources is the campus interview program. The program gives students early experience in being interviewed and a chance at employment. A company brochure file contains information on specific companies that students can use as background information before their interviews.

Other resources available at the placement center include:

- A job vacancy book, containing full information on available jobs.

- Placement workshops that cover job search strategies, resume writing and interview skills.

- Placement seminars that provide assistance in focusing on a specific job, writing letters, identifying potential employers, and developing interview skills.

"Just ask and you'll get the help," Smith says.
