

Ducks racing for title today

By Marcus Prater

Oregon will be out chasing the national cross country individual and team titles at today's NCAA championships at the Indiana Golf Course in Bloomington, Ind.

Junior Jim Hill leads the Oregon men's contingent while sophomore Kathy Hayes who is suffering from a cold, is the mainstay of the women. Both teams arrived Saturday for the annual affair involving 32 teams and 272 runners. The men will not run until today at 8:45 a.m. (PST). The women start an hour sooner.

Hill, after smashing the 10,000-meter record in last week's Pac-10 championship, is contending for the individual title, but the Ducks as a team are expected to battle it out for a spot in the top six.

Arkansas, Providence, Wisconsin, Texas-El Paso, East Tennessee State, Colorado,

Oregon and UCLA are the favorites, according to Oregon coach Bill Dellinger and Harrier Magazine, though in slightly different order.

"Arkansas had the first through sixth places in their conference meet. They are going to be really tough," Dellinger said of the Razorbacks.

Although the Ducks won the Pac-10 title over favorite UCLA, they're only ranked sixth nationally and nobody's giving them much of a chance to win the title.

"I think most coaches consider us to be a good team. But not good enough to be in the top three," Dellinger said.

Oregon is returning to nationals after breaking a 12-year string when they didn't make the trip last season. Texas-El Paso took the team title last season and they have a new tandem of Kenyans to challenge Hill and others for the individual prize.

Zarkame Barie and Shahanga Gidamis will find competition from Providence's Brian Quinn, Mark Scrutton of Colorado, and Indiana's Jim Spivey, the nation's 1,500-meter champion who is running on his home course and Hill.

Other Ducks who will be at the starting line with Hill are John Zishka, Greg Erwin, Harold Kuphaldt, Matt McGuirk, Brad Simpson and Vance Blow. Only the top five finishers will be scored.

"They're all healthy and they've got to run their best races," Dellinger said.

The women are not as fortunate as the men in the injury department. Coach Tom Heinonen's team has been plagued all year and the end of the season is no exception.

Senior Eryn Forbes, Kathy Hayes, Lisa Martin and Claudette Groenendaal are all battling viruses and will not be at full strength. That leaves the Ducks with three healthy runners: Kim Roth, Rosa Gutierrez and Allison Snow.

The health problems haven't changed Heinonen's opinion that his team will break into the top three with a good performance.

"I still think it is possible to get in top three. But it will take a solid performance by the top five," he said. "I'm sure every campus in the country is being swept by colds and viruses. Some teams will be a little luckier than others."

Heinonen cited Virginia, Stanford, Clemson and Tennessee, along with his third-ranked Ducks as the top five teams.

Stanford's Ceci Hopp and Kim Schnurpfeil, Washington's Regina Joyce and Welch will contest for the individual laurels while Hayes and Tennessee's Kathy Hadler are the dark-horses, according to Heinonen.

"A completely healthy Kathy can compete with any of those girls," Heinonen said, emphasizing the "any."
