Student research group pens clean air petition

The Oregon Student Public Interest Research Group has started a petition drive to extend the Clean Air Act.

OSPIRG is supporting the Stafford bill, which will keep the clean-air standards the same while eliminating some red tape for businesses, says Doug Bain, petition project volunteer. The program opposes the Dingell-Broyhill bill, which Pres. Ronald Reagan supports, that reduces current air standards, he says.

The group started the petition drive to influence Oregon Sens.

Mark Hatfield and Bob Packwood to support the Stafford bill, Bain says. Neither senator has committed himself to a particular bill, he adds.

OSPIRG aims to collect 8,000 petition signatures to send to the senators, Bain says. The goal is attainable because Oregon is noted for its environmental concerns, he says.

The petition drive will go until dead week, Bain says. Petition tables are located in the EMU and various residence dining halls.

Rhetoric scholar, poet to recite works tonight

University News Bureau

Poet Leonard Nathan will read from his early and recent works tonight at 8 p.m. in the EMU Forum Room. The free public event is sponsored by the creative writing program.

"Every poet has one or two compulsive themes," says Nathan, a rhetoric professor at the University of California. "One of mine is how to make things fit together that don't but should; the other is getting down far enough below a surface to see if something is still worth praising."

"Over the years and without self-consciously trying, I have moved closer and closer to the human voice in my verse. But I have also tried to keep a quality in it — for lack of a better word I call it eloquence — that makes it more than conversation. My hope is to be clear, true and good listening," Nathan said.

Nathan has written 10 poetry books including "The Day the Perfect Speakers Left," "Returning Your Call" and, most recently, "Dear Blood."

It's all true.
