

FDA board considers fate of birth control shot

WASHINGTON (AP) — A government scientific panel begins considering today whether American women should be able to use a three-month contraceptive injection hailed as an improvement over "the pill" but reviled by some as a potential cause of cancer.

A Food and Drug Administration public inquiry board will hear evidence on the contraceptive Depo-Provera, then take as long as it requires to make a recommendation. FDA Commissioner Arthur Hull Hayes Jr. will make the final ruling on the drug's fate in the lucrative American market.

Although Depo-Provera is available as a contraceptive in 84 countries and used by 1.5 million women worldwide, the decision about its use in the United States is expected to have international repercussions.

Some nations which haven't approved the drug's use cite the FDA's reluctance to clear Depo-Provera as a contraceptive.

Federation selects Taber

Robert Taber, a University journalism professor, has been appointed to a two-year term on the Academic Committee of the American Advertising Federation.

The University AAF chapter, which Taber advises, was one of 14 national chapters to honor an advertising professional or organization during 1982.

The chapter nominated the late Arlyn Cole, co-founder of Cole and Weber Advertising Agency, Portland, for an Aid to Advertising Education Award. The national AAF approved the nomination, which is limited to those who have made an outstanding contribution to education in advertising.

Cole willed real estate worth more than $1 million to the University School of Journalism.

The AAF is an umbrella organization of professional advertising groups in the United States.

The purpose of the academic division of AAF is to better prepare students to perform in the advertising business, says Taber.

Aid forms still unavailable

Financial aid forms for the 1983-84 school year have not yet arrived in the University financial aid office.

According to Ed Vignoul, financial aid director, the forms are expected no later than Saturday.

Vignoul says decisions by Congress on financial aid were made late and the delay has made it difficult for the Education Department to compile the forms.

Because the forms are late in reaching the University, Vignoul says the University will extend its deadline for receiving the FAFs from March 1 to April 1.
