

Six groups name Watt in law suit

WASHINGTON (AP) — Six environmental groups, contending that Interior Secretary James Watt acted illegally in removing 800,000 acres from wilderness protection, filed suit Thursday to overturn the decision.

The suit asks a federal district court in Sacramento, Calif., to return the land in 10 Western states to its prior status as wilderness study areas and block Watt from allowing any development.

"Secretary Watt's deceptive, disreputable and illegal action removing hundreds of thousands of acres of public land from wilderness consideration underscores his fanatical determination to open wilderness to development," said William Turnage, executive director of the Wilderness Association.

The suit contends that Watt's Dec. 28 decision violated legal requirements that an environmental impact statement be prepared assessing the action and that the public be allowed to comment.

Hotel residents see red as new owner raises rent

PORTLAND (AP) — The sale of a residential hotel to followers of Indian guru Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh has angered residents whose rents will more than double under the new ownership.

"I think I'll throw all my red clothes out," said a disgruntled Janice Quaempts, 18, in reference to the crimson-clad followers of Rajneesh, who live on a central Oregon ranch.

The 76 residents of the Martha Washington Hotel have until Feb. 11 to relocate or to pay $25 a day. The Rajneeshees bought the hotel to house believers who work at various Rajneesh-owned businesses in Portland.

Ma Prem Isabel, Rajneeshee spokeswoman, said the residents are welcome to stay in the hotel and get three vegetarian meals a day if they pay the higher rent. The Rajneeshees have no aid plan for current residents, she said.

The hotel has been run by the non-profit Portland Women's Union and has charged $285 monthly for room and board. The new rent and meals charge will be $25 daily, or about $750 a month for members of the public.

"You can get a nice condo for that," said Pat Malone, the night desk clerk who also has lived at the hotel.

"The main point is to whom they sold," said Mario Busto, assistant manager.
