

Business group files suit against SOSOC

A $20 million suit was filed Friday against Southern Oregon State College by a group of Ashland business people over the tax-exempt college's refusal to stop housing tourists and other non-students involved in activities at the school.

The main problem is the Oregon Shakespearean Festival, which attracts hundreds of people to the town of Ashland. They come primarily in the summer to see the repertory of plays presented by the festival.

The college often houses charter groups during the summer months when the residence halls are not filled with students.

The 15 business people sued SOSOC in circuit court in Salem, where attorney Doug Vande Griend said he also would seek a preliminary injunction to bar the college from providing rooms, food and other services to non-students.

Spokesman Leo Jansen, owner of the White Motel in Ashland, said the suit came after negotiations with college officials broke down. The business people claim the school competes with them unfairly because it is tax-exempt.

Marythea Grebner, a spokeswoman for the college, said officials had not yet seen the suit.

"We feel that what we've done has been helpful to the community by bringing in groups that would not be coming here otherwise," Grebner says.

Earlier in the week, an informal opinion by the state attorney general's office said that housing summer groups in residence halls does not jeopardize the college's tax exempt status.

Ashland has been the site of the annual Shakespearean festival, which runs from February to October, for almost 50 years. It is this southern Oregon town's biggest industry.

The Oregon Shakespearean Festival is a nonprofit group that is not affiliated with SOSOC.

Court convicts man of fall rape of student

Philip Wade McClure was convicted in Lane County Circuit Court Friday of kidnapping, raping, sodomizing and robbing a 19-year-old University student last fall.

McClure, 29, had already served a 42-month prison sentence on a 1978 rape conviction before being paroled in June.

A 10-man, two-woman jury deliberated for three hours before rendering the four verdicts.

During the three-day trial, the victim testified that McClure attacked her on a bike path near the Willamette River, hit her with an umbrella and dragged her into bushes bordering the river.

McClure contended that he was home at the time the attack was committed.

In her testimony, the rape victim identified McClure as the man who attacked her, and she identified an umbrella, seized by police from McClure's home, as the one used in the assault. She also identified photos of McClure's battered white Volkswagen bus as the car she saw near the bike path shortly before she was raped.

Each conviction carries a potential maximum sentence of 20 years imprisonment. A sentencing date has not yet been set, but will follow pre-sentence reports, according to Circuit Judge James Hargreaves, who presided over the trial.
