Two council posts new to ASUO ballot

Students will elect two students to positions on a newly created student council, which meets with the University president, during the ASUO elections.

The President's Advisory Council is a nine-member student board that advises the president on issues.

The council met with University Pres. Paul Olum for the first time last Thursday and plans to meet with him monthly, said Mark Cleveland, ASUO director of University and academic affairs and a council member.

The council consists of the ASUO president and an ASUO presidential appointee, a Student University Affairs Board member, a Residence Hall Governance Committee member, two ASUO-funded program directors, an Incidental Fee Committee member and two student-elected representatives.

The meetings will be closed to the public because Olum will discuss sensitive matters with the council, Cleveland said.

"It's the only thing like it on the West Coast, as far as we know," Cleveland said.

Four candidates running for the two elected council seats spoke at a debate forum Monday.

Gary Okazaki, a finance junior, emphasized his work with the Asian American Student Union and Oregon Student Public Interest Research Group. The council gives students a chance to voice their concerns to the administration, he said.

Kasey Brooks, an international studies sophomore, is a current council member. Brooks said her current position gives her a feeling for how the council works.

David Markoff, a political science junior, said he would work to improve communication between students and the administration.

Brent Paz, a journalism sophomore, said the University needs to reverse its image as a "Birkenstock college." The council allows students "to tell it to the top," he said.

Architecture dean gets association presidency

Wilmot Gilland, dean of the University architecture and allied arts school, has been named president-elect of the Association of Collegiate Schools of Architecture.

He will become vice president and president-elect during 1983-84 and will assume the presidency the following year.

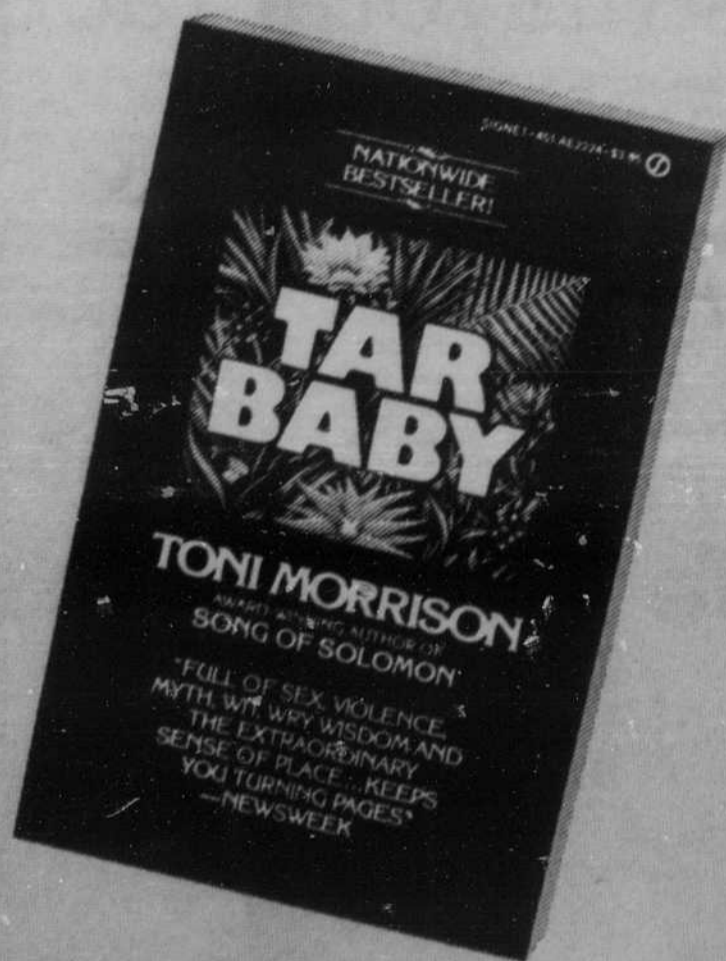

ACSA, which includes 104 member schools in the United States and Canada, has worked to improve architecture education since its founding in 1912. The association also sponsors workshops and publishes a journal.

A University faculty member since 1969, Gilland is the fourth University dean or architecture department head to serve as the association's president.

Gilland, architecture department head from 1971-77, was appointed dean in 1981.
