

Soviets rule out more talks on treaties limiting nuke tests

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Soviet Union on Wednesday ruled out further talks on the Reagan administration's bid to tighten verification provisions in two unratified treaties limiting underground nuclear tests. "There is no need to hold negotiations on this subject," the Soviets said.

In an unusual statement issued through its embassy, the Kremlin accused the United States of trying to undermine the accords by pressing for the changes.

Promising not to take actions "inconsistent" with the 1974 and 1976 unratified treaties, the Soviets turned aside U.S. efforts to tighten verification procedures by saying procedures already exist for "mutual consultations" on any suspected violations.

The statement, telephoned to news agencies by Vladimir Mikoyan of the embassy's press office, recommended that the United States proceed with Senate ratification of the agreements reached in the Nixon and Ford administrations.

The principal provisions of those agreements restrict all underground tests — for either weapons or peaceful purposes — to 150 kilotons or less. That is equivalent to 10 times the power of the bomb the United States exploded on Hiroshima, Japan, in World War II. Earlier agreements with the Soviets banned atomic testing in the atmosphere, outer space and under water.

The treaties provide for what is known as "national technical means" of verification.

Negative evaluations may cause teacher bias, law students say

By Frank Shaw

A Tuesday discussion on a law course questionnaire raised concerns about teacher evaluations.

The questionnaire, distributed by Mark Wilson, a member of the curriculum committee, dealt primarily with the issue of offering another section of a constitutional law class spring term.

The furor began when 18 of the 350 students who filled out the form criticized the course instructor Linda Greene in the comments section.

"To say that Linda Greene is 'no damn good' and 'I hate her' does not help me very much," Bell said about the comments.

Only two of the students who criticized Greene signed their questionnaires.

"You should always want to sign a critical statement," Bell told the more than 50 law students attending the meeting.

Students then raised concerns about teacher evaluation policy and the possibility of a teacher confronting a student who had signed an unfavorable evaluation.

Bell explained the procedure, saying evaluations are never opened until after exams have been graded. Unsigned evaluations are not subject to handwriting analysis to determine their authors, he added.

"It is not done, and if it were done it would not be condoned," Bell said.

The evaluation process becomes suspect when students want to take the second term of a course with the same instructor, a student said.

He said it would be difficult for a professor to remain unbiased after reading a bad evaluation and having the student in the class again.

"Retaliation is barred," Bell said. "On some things you do not need to have rules."

Ken Ford, president of the Student Bar Association, said he would establish a committee to study the potential problems with evaluations and make a faculty recommendation.

Wilson said the meeting let students "blow off some steam."

"I'm glad that things came out the way they did," he said.
