

Missiles in Cuba not necessary, says Soviet

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union has "no need" to put nuclear missiles in Cuba in retaliation for U.S. deployment of new medium-range rockets in Europe later this year, a top Soviet general says.

It was the clearest signal yet from the Soviets that Cuba does not figure in their threat to retaliate for the planned "Euromissile" deployment.

The comments were made by Maj. Gen. Yuri Lebedev, a military adviser to Soviet arms-control negotiators, in an interview with The Associated Press.

Kremlin officials have warned repeatedly they will put the United States in an "analogous position" if the American missiles are stationed in Western Europe, within a few minutes' striking distance of Soviet territory.

These statements raised speculation in the United States that the Soviets were considering deploying mid-range rockets in Cuba.

Lebedev, dismissing that possibility, said one of the retaliatory options available to Soviet leaders would simply be expanding their own intermediate-range nuclear forces in Europe.

"It's enough to deploy new systems in Soviet territory," he said.

Would missiles be placed in Soviet-allied Cuba? "There is no need to do it and I have underlined that already," he responded.

The United States, under a NATO decision, plans to begin deploying 572 new medium-range missiles, with ranges of up to 1,500 miles, in five West European countries late this year. The Soviets have a similar number of SS-20s and other intermediate-range missiles targeted on Western Europe.

Lebedev was asked what the Soviet leadership meant when it threatened to put the United States in an "analogous position" if the new missiles are deployed.

"Do you have any doubts we will do it?" he asked.

Pressed on whether the threat meant missiles would be placed within close range of the United States, he replied:

"First of all, you have to know the general trend in Soviet policy — that not a single nuclear system is deployed anywhere else but in Soviet territory.

"And now we can say technological progress has brought us to the point where we don't have to have Soviet weapons within 1,000 kilometers (620 miles) of U.S. territory."
