House group visits Central America

WASHINGTON (AP) — Six House members flew Sunday to Central America as the Reagan administration tried to head off growing congressional opposition to its anti-Marxist campaign in the war-torn region.

Jeane Kirkpatrick, ambassador to the United Nations, expressed confidence that Congress would not rebuff Pres. Ronald Reagan's request for an added $60 million in military aid for El Salvador or curtail reported CIA activities against the leftist government in neighboring Nicaragua.

"What we hope is that Congress will share the responsibility for finding a constructive solution," Kirkpatrick said on ABC's "This Week With David Brinkley" show. "I think Congress will, frankly."

Reagan is scheduled to make his first foreign policy address to Congress on Wednesday to repeat his warnings that Nicaragua and Cuba, along with the leftists they support in El Salvador, threaten the stability of the region.

The House Appropriations subcommittee on foreign affairs is scheduled to vote a day earlier on the administration's request for additional military aid for El Salvador.

The panel's chairman, Rep. Clarence Long, D-Md., flew Sunday to El Salvador for a two-day visit before the vote. The House Foreign Affairs Committee voted 19-6 last week against Reagan's request.

Also Sunday, five members of the House Intelligence Committee, departed for a CIA-guided tour of El Salvador and Honduras, where the U.S. intelligence agency is reported to be supplying and training guerrillas opposed to Nicaragua's Marxist government.

Kirkpatrick said Reagan has maintained the same 3-to-1 ratio of economic and military aid used by previous administrations, while the Soviet Union has shipped thousands of tons of heavy weapons to the region.

Protesters want to end animal cruelty

From Associated Press

A woman paced in a yellow metal cage amidst 5,000 demonstrators carrying stuffed monkey dolls in Boston

Sunday while in Madison, Wis., protesters marched in a seven-block-long snake in efforts to save animals they say are abused by medical researchers.

The animal activists' "worldwide" rally, another chapter in the ongoing debate over the ethics of animal research, included demonstrations at federally funded primate research centers in California and Georgia and several planned in foreign countries.

"Up to now we have been patient," Dr. Richard Morgan, the national coordinator of Mobilization for Animals, told the banner-waving crowd in Boston.

Animal researchers have responded that the accusations of cruelty are "absolutely untrue" and "patently absurd."

Some Boston demonstrators munching veggie hot dogs that sold for $1.50 and others carrying signs reading "Animal Liberation" and "Research Labs are Unhealthy for Primates" jumped and cheered. Marion Bienes of Zaandam, Netherlands, paced in the cage in which she had imprisoned herself because "I want to help the monkeys."

"It has been said that we are seeking to prevent research benefitting mankind," said John Hoyt, president of the Humane Society of the United States, in the keynote speech.

"It has been said that we are more concerned for the welfare of animals than for the welfare of humans. It has been said we are intent on halting all research in any way utilizing animals. Nothing could be further from the truth."

FBI director: Soviets fail to dominate US freeze

NEW YORK (AP) — Soviet intelligence agents have tried and failed to dominate and manipulate the nuclear weapons freeze movement in the United States, FBI Director William Webster said Sunday.

"We see no indication that Soviet measures have resulted in gaining control over the operational aspects of the mainline organizations within the nuclear freeze movement," Webster said on CBS News' "Face the Nation."

"The overall freeze effort does not seem to us to have been dominated by (Soviet intelligence) or successfully manipulated," Webster said. "That is not to say they have not been trying diligently... including use of funds, to have an impact on the movement."

"It coincides with their foreign policy to do so," he said of the Soviets.

Webster also said that between 30 and 40 percent of the 3,000 diplomats which the Soviet Union and its allies have stationed in the United States are or have been involved in espionage. "That's a large number for us to keep track of," he said, adding that the FBI is seeking more funds to increase its surveillance efforts.

Asked what kind of information the spies are after, he said, "military secrets, military strategy, political strategy."
