Freeze on housing fee approved

Although residence hall and food service fees will increase at other state universities in 1983-84, most University dormitory rates will not rise.

The exception to this is large, single rooms in the University Inn which will increase 5.6 percent to $3,775. Regular multiple dormitory rates will remain at $2,115. The standard 20-meal plan will be reduced to 19 meals per week in all University dormitories, the State Board of Higher Education decided at their June meeting Friday in the EMU.

No one attended a public hearing, which was to have been held during the board meeting, to discuss the changes.

The board also approved connecting Autzen Stadium to the Metropolitan Wastewater Management Commission's new trunk sewer line. The hookup enables the City of Eugene to provide sanitary sewer service to properties within the vicinity of the stadium.

To finance the hookup costs, sports fans have already been paying a 50-cent surcharge on all Autzen Stadium tickets since the 1982 football season. Approximately $54,000 was raised by the surcharge, and the University expects to raise at least $55,000 in 1983-84 to cover the estimated $140,000 hookup charge.

The connection will enable the University to abandon four septic tanks which are not functioning properly and will permit the use of food service equipment within the recently completed Stadium Club improvement project, said Jack Hunderup, who is vice-chancellor for facilities planning.

In other business, the board unanimously approved a motion to implement a Ph.D. program in nursing at the Oregon Health Sciences University in Portland. The program's first candidates will be admitted fall term of 1985.

Funding for the program will be provided through reallocation of resources within the existing School of Nursing graduate program, said Clarethel Kahananui, who is acting vice-chancellor for academic affairs.

A name change will become effective for some 1983 spring term graduates at Portland State University. The M.A./M.S. in science will be changed to M.A./M.S. in engineering because the old title was "antiquated" and didn't specify the program's emphasis on engineering.

The board approved Chancellor Bud Davis's appointment of Larry Pierce as executive assistant to the chancellor, a position recently formed by Davis. Pierce's annual salary will be $53,000.

At the meeting, Davis said he will discontinue a search for a vice-chancellor of academic affairs pending re-examination of the state system's administrative offices and their duties.

Jane Carpenter of Medford received a standing ovation for two-terms of service. She stepped down from her board position Friday because board members are eligible to serve only two terms.

Replacing Carpenter will be Richard Hensley, also of Medford, who was appointed by Gov. Vic Atiyeh.

OSU student Marion Weatherford, one of two student board members, also stepped down from his post Friday. Weatherford, who graduated recently, will be working for Standard Insurance Co. in Portland. Atiyeh is expected to name a new student board member, possibly from the University, soon.
