African sports journalists stop in Eugene

University news bureau

Seven African sports journalists on a visit to the United States will stop in Eugene June 28-30 as guests of the 1984 Olympic Scientific Congress.

Hosted by the U.S. State Department, the journalists are visiting 10 cities to learn about preparations for the 1984 Olympic Festival which includes the Olympic Scientific Congress set July 19-26 in Eugene just prior to the XXIII Olympic Games in Los Angeles. They are also studying sports and the media in America.

The African journalists are scheduled to meet with reporters Wednesday. University Pres. Paul Olum will welcome and introduce them. They will also tour the campus and visit the Eugene Register-Guard newspaper.

That evening, they will participate in a by-invitation-only discussion with about 30 prominent local athletes, journalists and coaches, focusing on such topics as how U.S. sports are affected and shaped by the media and vice versa.

The seven visiting journalists work for print and broadcast media in Malawi, Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe. They were invited to participate in the monthlong tour by U.S. embassies in their respective countries. The trip is funded by the U.S. Information Agency's International Visitor program.

Before their arrival in Eugene, the Africans will have visited Washington, Los Angeles and Reno. They also plan stops in Indianapolis, Raleigh-Durham, Atlanta, Chicago and New York City where they will be guests of CBS Television.

Themed "Sport, Health and Well-being," the Olympic Scientific Congress is expected to attract more than 5,000 participants and observers who will examine some 40 topics including sport and the mass media, biomechanics, sport and politics, and the role of nutrition in sport.

Sponsors include the University College of Human Development and performance, the U.S. Olympic Organizing Committee and several international sports organizations.

crucified for "the sins of the past."

Thorn says current employees make an average annual salary of $26,000 and are offered four years of free college tuition.

According to Thorn, co-owner William Coors (son of founder Adolph and brother of Joe Coors) is a political moderate whose contributions to women's groups in the last few years exceeded $1 million.

Hendriksen cites that figure as being somewhere in the neighborhood of $2,000, and along with Fletcher, considers those contributions to be mere window-dressing for a corporation that finances various right-wing and reactionary causes and organizations.

Organizations funded by the Coors Foundation include the Heritage Foundation, which Fletcher calls "a right-wing think tank," and the Mountain States Legal Foundation, formerly headed by Interior Secretary James Watt.

While Thorn's statement that a long strike ended in employee-voted decertification of the union in 1977 is true, those who voted were strikebreakers hired precisely because they were anti-union, Fletcher says.

Fletcher freely admits that his lobbying against Coors was based solely on their "anti-unionism" and "financing of right-wing, reactionary causes." "If that's a political thing," he says, "so be it. Plenty of other people up there (Salem) do it."

Because the pasteurization statute only applies to packaged malt beverages, Coors could sell its keg beer in Oregon.
