Election loss spells end to Sheriff's patrol

By Michele Matassa
Of the Emerald

At the arrival of the Fourth of July holiday weekend mid-night Friday, will be the dismissal of all Sheriff's Patrol in Lane County.

The sheriff's office suffered a severe blow in Tuesday's county election, as the law enforcement "menu" ballot lost 25,738 to 18,910. The sheriff's separate measure — which would have funded prisoner transport — lost by an even wider margin, 27,674 to 16,657, according to the county elections office.

And with the holiday approaching, this defeat will be felt immediately, says Sheriff Dave Burks. Patrol will be ended by midnight Friday, he says.

"The greatest impact, of course, is going to be on the victims. Those are the ones that are going to suffer the most on this whole thing because there will be victims who would not have been victims had not our services been cut.

"There will be people who will wait longer for help," Burks says.

In spite of his disappointment over the defeat, Burks says he is not surprised by it.

"We knew we had an uphill battle because, obviously, the majority of the money was going to law enforcement on the May 17 ballot which failed 2:1," he says.

Burks attributes the loss partly to the fact that the sheriff's office was on the ballot with the district attorney's office and the juvenile department.

Also "the general feeling towards government and bureaucracy" hurt the levy, he says.

"No one trusts government anymore" because of "the almost virtual certainty of higher taxes by the state. They whittle away at the property relief fund year after year," Burks says.

Lewis Simmons, assistant chief for the Juvenile Department, says confusion largely caused the voters' reaction Tuesday. His department's separate ballot lost 27,891 to 16,670.

The voters were confused because they didn't know they had to pass the "A" ballot — the $2.9 million menu measure — before any of the other measures could pass, says Simmons, who also took the levy's defeat without surprise.
