

Wheel-warning works

Campus security officers expressed pleasure Thursday at the success of the new campus bike regulations, which they say are being obeyed by 75 percent of students.

"People have been pretty cooperative" about adhering to the rules, according to Don Brooks, public safety associate director.

The new rules prohibit riding in three especially crowded areas of campus, including the EMU breezeway, the residence hall section on Agate Street between 13th and 15th avenues, and all pathways between Gerlinger Hall.

Security officers have only been making verbal warnings to violators thus far, Brooks says, but they will "probably" start issuing written warnings Monday. Brooks says he's "not exactly sure" when they will begin issuing fines for moving violations.

"It takes them (students) a while to get used to" the rules, Brooks says, trying to account for the estimated one out of four students who have forgotten to dismount their bikes in off-limit areas.

police beat

Among campus-area crimes reported recently to the Eugene Police Department:

A public indecency was reported in the School of Education Sept. 23. Sgt. Rick Allison said a secretary observed a nude man masturbate and ejaculate in front of a window and then run off.

Officers arrested a knife-wielding 17-year-old male in Walton complex Tuesday night. He was charged with disorderly conduct, curfew violation and being a minor in possession of alcohol.

Allison reported nine bikes were stolen on the University campus. Also, eight students were arrested during the same period for shoplifting at the University Bookstore.

Recent thefts include a 21-inch color television, settee, microphone and amplifier with an estimated value of $1,049 from a University Inn room. A watch and currency worth $277 were taken from Esslinger Hall, as was a $100 cassette player from Caswell and books and a cassette player totaling $150 from Lawrence Hall.

Damage to Kappa Alpha Theta sorority occurred Monday. A gate was damaged and a sign was taken.
