

Congressional task force urges pay raise for teachers

WASHINGTON (AP) — Immediate steps must be taken to raise the salaries of all teachers rather than concentrate only on rewarding some with merit pay, a congressional task force said Tuesday.

The 21-member bipartisan panel said merit pay, a major feature of Pres. Reagan's education proposals, is worth experimenting with but alone is not a solution for the ills besetting the American schools.

"School districts and states must raise the basic pay of teachers," the task force said in its primary recommendation. "Without this, other steps will have limited impact."

Secondly, it said, "the pay of starting teachers must receive immediate attention. Higher pay for beginning teachers should be accompanied by higher, state-imposed standards for those entering the profession."

The task force also recommended setting up a $50 million federal program of scholarships as an incentive for gifted high school students to enter the teaching profession.
