Greg Moser has gone from an instructee to an instructor. The ex-Oregon receiver spends his time at Autzen Stadium working with scout team players.

Player-coach-announcer Moser is Mr. Versatile

By Steve Irvin
Of the Emerald

In an age of specialization in professional sports, there exists the athlete who earns a living by being a jack-of-all-trades.

Los Angeles Dodger Derrel Thomas, who has played eight positions during his baseball career, is an example.

In the United States Football League, an example is ex-Oregon split end Greg Moser of the Houston Gamblers.

Moser comes to the Gamblers from the Los Angeles Express, where he played on every special team in addition to his pass-catching duties in 1982.

Besides being a do-it-all on the playing field, Moser has been versatile off it.

This year, he is a graduate assistant coach for Oregon football, working with special teams and wide receiver coach John Ramsdell. And when he isn't coaching football, Moser talks about it — he provided color commentary with Todd McKim on KEZL-TV's broadcasts when the Ducks faced Ohio State University, San Jose State University and University of Washington.

While at Oregon, Moser served primarily as a wide receiver. Before graduating in 1982, he climbed to ninth on the school's career reception list with 82. But as a pro, Moser realizes being versatile makes his stock rise in employers' eyes.

"The more things you do, the more valuable you are to them," he says. "I just looked at it as a way to increase my value to the team and the management."

Being an asset is vital to remaining employed in pro football, according to Moser.

"They (the owners) are in the business to win games and make money," Moser says. "If I can make them $5000, fine, but if I'm going to be a liability to them, they'll cut me."

Moser says this do-or-die business approach to football is something a rookie must adjust to.

"In college, if you have a bad game or if you don't start, you know they're not going to take your scholarship," he says, adding that in pro ball, by contrast, "there's not many second chances given unless they have a whole bunch of money invested in you."

"It's your job to do well on Sunday when you play the game, and do what they ask you to do. If you do, you keep getting paid," Moser says.

Doing what is asked of him also is integral to Moser's coaching job with the Ducks.

Moser's coaching duties are characteristically

Emerald and Nike present 'Trivia time'

Think you know your Oregon sports? Take a shot at answering these five questions about Oregon teams and athletes of the past (and present) in the Emerald's weekly sports trivia quiz.

The winner, who is the first person to hand in the most correct answers, will win a $10 gift certificate. Answers should be handed in to the Emerald office, Suite 300 EMU, by 3 p.m. Friday.

In the event of ties, winners will be determined by who handed in answers first.

See quiz rules below, have fun and good luck.

1. Oregon football has never had a winless season. a) True b) False.

2. Oregon football's worst loss to a Pac-10 team was: a) 58-0 to Washington, 1973 b) 66-7 to Arizona, 1961 c) 63-0 to Oregon State, 1968.

3. Volleyball is a tall players sport, but Oregon has one player who's only 5-3. She is: a) Lisa Gemoya b) Sue Harbour c) Shannon Gates.

4. In 1981, Oregon's Leann Warren was second at cross country nationals. That performance topped 1980, when she finished a) fourth b) 25th c) 107th.

5. While Oregon's men's cross country team has won four national championships, University of Texas-El Paso has won an astounding 12. a) True b) False.

Quiz rules: Gift certificates provided by NIKE EUGENE, W. 10th and Olive. Answers should be handed in on a piece of paper with name, year and major — all current students and faculty may enter, but only once; answers and name of winners published in Monday's Emerald. Winners must come to front desk, EMU Suite 300, and show proper identification to collect certificates; certificate valid at NIKE EUGENE, 10th and Olive, only; certificates expire 60 days after quiz date; Emerald employees may not enter contest.

Attention

On Monday, November 7, we will begin removing textbooks from the sales floor. This move is in preparation for returning these excess books to the publishers, and to make way for Winter Term texts. We are suggesting: If at this time you have not yet purchased needed Fall Term books, DO SO IMMEDIATELY. Buy now - avoid problems later.
