UO Bookstore

Attention

On Monday, November 7, we will begin removing textbooks from the sales floor. This move is in preparation for returning these excess books to the publishers, and to make way for Winter Term texts. We are suggesting: If at this time you have not yet purchased needed Fall Term books, DO SO IMMEDIATELY. Buy now - avoid problems later.

From a local pizza-lover...

The Homebaked Pizza Cookbook
Warren F. Sablosky
Earth Evolution Publishing, Eugene
$5.95

For pizza-lovers who prefer to make their favorite food at home, a new pizza recipe book, written by Eugenic Warren Sablosky, is on the market.
Sablosky says he started researching his cookbook about three years ago because he felt there was no good book out that dealt exclusively with pizza. He also thinks that a better pizza can be made at home than you can buy.

He adds that in recent years, pizza has "by statistics alone" become the world's most popular food, outselling even hamburgers, and grossing over $1 billion in sales in the U.S., making it "one of the largest industries in America."

According to Sablosky, pizza has also become the top-selling frozen food in America.

Part of the reason for its popularity, he says, is that pizza is considered the "perfect food;" it has everything a human being needs to be healthy. And, he adds, you can make a pizza that's even more nutritional by combining certain foods, something he demonstrates masterfully in his book.

"The Homebaked Pizza Cookbook" contains over 70 recipes, including more than 25 for the crust alone. Also included is a history of pizza, several techniques for using a food processor in making pizza, some traditional pizza methods, and all kinds of recipes. The recipes range from gourmet to natural foods and include meat and vegetarian entries. The book also includes instructions for building an adobe-style wood-fired oven, which, according to Sablosky, is the way pizzas were originally baked.

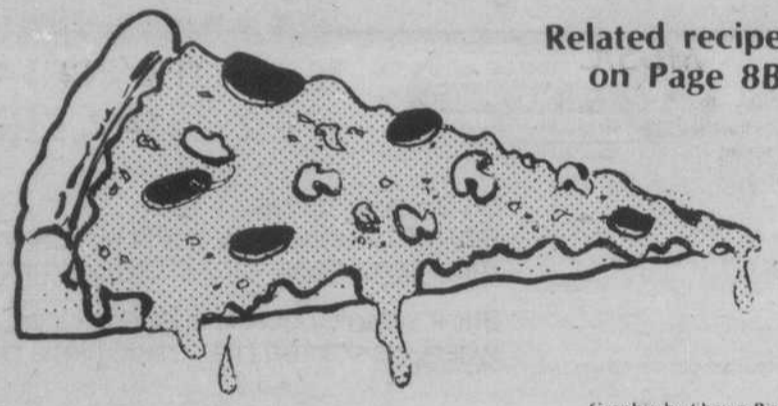

"By using a wood-fired oven," Sablosky said, "pizza can be baked very quickly and at a very high temperature. The oven, he adds, can be used for many things and makes a great multi-purpose oven."

Sablosky will be offering both a pizza-cooking class and a pizza-catering service. For further information on these services, call 343-3519.

"The Homebaked Pizza Cookbook" can be ordered through Earth Evolution Publishing, 55 N. Monroe, Eugene, Or. 97402. Sablosky will mail the book for you $1 more if you're interested in sending it as a gift.
