

Keutzer named 'prof of month'

By Melissa Martin

Prof. Carolin Keutzer, Mortar Board's professor of the month, says she tries to "add a little spice" to psychology tests.

In fact, her students say she approaches both teaching and relationships creatively.

"Her style makes her very approachable, like a friend," wrote one student from Keutzer's "Theories of Personality" class.

"Each lecture seems fresh and new, a presentation in itself," another student wrote. "Her sense of humor makes what could be boring material come alive."

"I look forward to going to class. I really enjoy the students," says Keutzer who was one of 25 nominees.

Mortar Board, a student honor society, collects student nominations from boxes in the library and the EMU and narrows down the nominees based on past nominations and student comments on nomination forms. Mortar Board representatives then visit the two finalists' classes, hand out questionnaires to students and choose a professor of the month.

Keutzer graduated from Cottey College in Nevada, Mo., in 1958 and received her bachelor's, master's and doctorate from the University. She has taught at the University for 15 years.

Keutzer describes students in one of her psychology classes as "enthusiastic, laughing a lot and spontaneous."

"You know how you go in a room and there's warmth there?" Keutzer says. "My class is that way."

As a college student, Keutzer knew she was going into teaching so she took notes on what she liked and disliked about tests professors gave her.

Now, as a professor, she conducts experiments such as printing the last two tests on colored paper and including cartoons. The student response was great, she says.

"I vowed not to do confusing exams," she says. She does not give multiple choice questions with an answer such as "a, b and d," and she won't give true and false questions because, "nothing is either true or false."

Keutzer has two offices on campus, one in Straub Hall, which represents her role as a teacher and researcher, and one on the counseling floor of the student health center for her work in therapy.

In 1978, after a retreat with students and administrators Keutzer saw a need to "make the University a more hospitable environment," and created the first peer advising group. She is still the head advisor for psychology and sponsor for peer advising.

"I see the other side of the coin so vividly when I deal with students in therapy," Keutzer says.

"I see how alienated a person can feel in a cold rejected environment. It inspires me to try to turn things around."

"Sometimes, in the need of efficiency, the need of people is not attended to enough."

In addition to her counseling, Keutzer is working with a physics professor to research recent developments in the study of consciousness and quantum mechanics.

When pressure builds, Keutzer runs every day after work like she has been for the past 10 years, through the cemetery behind her house.

What advice would she give students to help them cope with pressure?

"One thing I would encourage people to do is to make attempts at getting closer relationships with their instructors, more student/teacher interaction. The faculty is receptive. I don't know why there is sometimes a barrier."

String quartet from Canada will perform

Classical music lovers take note. The Orford String Quartet, a Canadian chamber ensemble, will perform Saturday, Nov. 12 in Beall Concert Hall, as part of the University Chamber Music Series.

The quartet will perform Mozart's String Quartet No. 1; and Brahms' String Quartet in C Minor, Op. 51, No. 1.

The Orford String members are violinists Andrew Dawes and Kenneth Perkins; violist Terence Helmer; and cellist Dennis Brott.

The internationally recognized quartet adopted its name from the Orford Arts Centre of Jeunes Musicales on Mount Orford in Quebec where the founding members met in 1965. In 1968 the ensemble was established as quartet-in-residence at the University of Toronto, a position it still holds.

Tickets for the remainder of the Chamber Music Series are still on sale for $38 and $24, depending on seat location. The series includes five other concerts.

In addition single tickets are on sale at the music school's Community Relations Office for $6 and $4. For more information call 686-5678.
