

them play — they are beatable." If Cal, 18-17, is beatable, then Oregon's Sue Harbour and Lisa Gemoya will likely do most of the beating. Harbour has feasted on 542 kills this year, and many of them have come off the sets of Gemoya.

Another plus for the Ducks will be senior Cathy Hill, who is healthy and ready to go for Cal.

Unfortunately for Oregon, Cal's 6-0 All-American middle blocker Sylvia Monnet is ready to go too.

"We have to contain Sylvia Monnet," says Voelz, who coached the Ducks to a 2-2 mark at the prestigious UCLA Invitational last weekend.

Although Voelz has her players jacked up for the meeting with the Bears, the Ducks must take on a steady SJSU team a night later.

The Spartans, 18-7 and 6-1 in NorPac, look to sophomore outside hitter Lisa Ice for big points — she leads her team with 231 kills.

"She," says Voelz, "is their biggie. We won't be able to stop Lisa Ice — she is a lefty and you can't tell where she is going to hit the ball."

If the Ducks don't stop Ice, they may be out in the cold, but Voelz stresses that her team needs a split this weekend.

"We have to beat one or the other," says Voelz. "This is it."

The first three spots in the league tourney belong to top-ranked University of Pacific, the Spartans, and 19th-ranked Oregon State University.

Harbour is averaging an unbelievable 14.7 kills a match, far ahead of anyone else in the conference.

Women runners battle Stanford

By Todd Fletcher
Of the Emerald

With four runners returning from last year's Region 9 meet, the Oregon women's cross country team looks to be a favorite in Saturday's Region 8 meet at Lane Community College.

The meet has been renamed Region 8 from Region 9, the tag Kathy Hayes, Kim Roth, Lisa Martin and Claudette Groenendaal competed under a year ago in Fresno, Calif. The Ducks finished second behind Stanford University.

Oregon wants to make that second a first, and they'll have seven healthy runners Saturday.

Martin, who didn't run in the Washington Invitational Oct. 29, has had a great two weeks of training, according to Oregon Coach Tom Heinonen.

With a healthy Martin, Heinonen expects the Ducks to battle Stanford and UCLA in this year's race, although he said Stanford's team will be something of a question mark.

Saturday's top four teams will claim berths in the National Collegiate Athletic Association championships Nov. 21 in Bethlehem, Pa.

The Cardinal will be minus Ceci Hopp, who won the region meet last year, because of a hip problem.

Heinonen says with Hopp running, Stanford would be a drastically different team at nationals than at regionals.

"We could easily beat them at regionals, but they could be overwhelming at nationals," says Heinonen.

At LCC, Stanford will rely on Alison Wiley, who finished ninth in last year's NCAA meet, and Regina Jacobs, who finished 11th in this meet a year ago.

While the Ducks face their best competition of the year, they do have the advantage of running on their home turf.

Heinonen sees the race as a great challenge and an opportunity to see how Oregon will match up at NCAAs.

"It's a great preparation for the national championship," says Heinonen. "About six runners in this race have the potential to finish in the top five at nationals."
