

gave him Carter documents, including a briefing book used to prepare Pres. Jimmy Carter for a pivotal campaign debate against Ronald Reagan.

Casey repeatedly has said he cannot recall seeing any Carter papers during the campaign.

But sources said the subcommittee's report cites "independent testimony" supporting Baker's statement.

Meanwhile, two law professors said Tuesday they will try new maneuvers to compel the appointment of a special prosecutor to investigate how the Reagan campaign got the Carter White House briefing papers.

John Banzhaf and Peter Meyers outlined their strategy at a news conference.

In a related development, Albosta released a letter in which the subcommittee asked Attorney General William French Smith to appoint a special prosecutor to investigate "possible crimes committed" in connection with the Carter papers.

The Democratic-controlled panel said the counsel, permitted under the 1978 Ethics in Government Act, should "pay particular attention to the questionable and flatly contradictory statements made to the subcommittee during the course of its investigation."

The letter, signed by Albosta, said the recommendation was "made completely independent" of the May 14 order of U.S. District Judge Harold Greene directing Smith to seek appointment of counsel.

At the Justice Department, spokeswoman Judith Pond said "we haven't gotten the letter yet" and thus could not comment on it.
