EAT LESS STAY HEALTHY

International studies show a wide variation in cancer incidence from one country to another. Studies of migrant populations suggest that nutrition rather than environmental chemicals plays a major role in these differences.
For example, Japanese who migrate to the US have increased breast cancer, but decreased stomach cancer. This is because Americans eat more fat than people in Japan.
Colon cancer also correlates well with fat consumption and it is inversely connected to fiber ingested; eat more fiber and have less chance of getting colon cancer.

The most general protective measure against cancer is reducing calorie intake. Eat less and stay healthy appears to be a good rule of thumb.
The biggest risk factors, though, are smoking and drinking alcohol.

ANANDA MARGA PRESENTS REBEL WITHOUT A CAUSE

James Dean, who during his short career epitomized the misunderstood and rebellious youth of the 50's, vividly created this image on the screen in his dramatization of a teenager caught in a web of alienation and juvenile violence. "It was this film which led to the posthumous cult of James Dean: the identification of a dead actor with the spirit of a generation."
