

IFC, athletic dept. work out funds

The Incidental Fee Committee and the Athletic Department worked out the final details of the IFC funding contract Thursday. Agreement was reached Monday on the level of funding, which gives the athletic department about $128,000 less than the $850,000 originally requested.

Student Incidental fees will fund 50 percent of minor and women's sports, not to exceed $602,439. The IFC will also match student ticket sales up to $120,000.

The athletic department funding will increase student incidental fees by $3, raising them to $59. Student tickets for men's basketball will also be raised from $2 to $3.

The athletic department is disappointed with the level of funding, said Chris Voelz, assistant athletic director, but she said she was pleased with the way the IFC handled the negotiations.

"I want to go on record that you treated student needs fairly and treated our needs fairly," she said.

University Pres. Paul Olum must make final approval of the IFC contract.

In other business, the IFC allocated $300 to the Student University Relations Council as seed money for promoting homecoming.

Tests take a backseat next week

In theory, dead week should be the easiest week in the term. No big exams — just seven days to prepare for the next week's finals.

Unfortunately, that is not always the case. Last term, the Student University Affairs Board received about 60 grievances from students charging that various professors had violated the University's dead week policy. And about 30 of the complaints turned out to be valid, according to Mike Prothe, the outgoing SUAB chair.

The policy, as enacted by the 1982 University Assembly, states that no finals or examinations worth more than 20 percent of the final grade be given during dead week, except for make-up exams. In addition, no projects may be due unless clearly specified on the syllabus during the first two weeks of the term. Take-home exams, meanwhile, must be due no earlier than the date of the normally scheduled final exam.

Most of the grievances can be worked out directly with the faculty member, Prothe says, adding that the professor never learns of the student's identity throughout the process. If necessary, SUAB will take the grievance to the department head, dean, or vice provost, Prothe says.

"We urge students to turn in their grievances in advance," he says. "If they call the day of the exam or the day before the exam, to change it is too much of an impact on the students who have prepared for it."
