

Study rates faculty high

A national study of the recent research contributions of accounting faculties ranks the University accounting faculty among the top 15 such groups at public and private universities in North America.

The study of 430 accounting faculties in the United States and Canada was conducted by Lawrence Brown and John Gardner, accounting professors at the State University of New York at Buffalo.

Brown and Gardner examined research published in four top international accounting journals between 1976 and 1982 to determine which faculty's work was cited by other researchers.

The University department ranked 14th in the study. According to Barry Spicer, accounting department head, the only other West Coast universities with high rankings are Stanford, the University of Washington, the University of California at Berkeley and UCLA.

"That is very good company to be in," Spicer said.

"Having our accounting faculty ranked so highly is certainly very good for morale, but it is not that surprising," said James Reinmuth, dean of the College of Business Administration.

"We have built up a first-rate young accounting faculty recruited from the same programs that are ranked highly in this study," Reinmuth said.

Brown and Gardner's analysis provides a measure of the quality of research published during this period in terms of the impact scholarly work has upon subsequent work, Reinmuth said.

This is the second significant national recognition this year for the University's accounting department. In the fall, national statistics for students taking the Certified Public Accounting examination showed University students placing well above the national average.

Reinmuth said the new ranking is particularly pleasing "because it comes on the heels of a recent national survey that ranked our management department sixth in the country and first in the Northwest among state-supported colleges and universities. These two rankings reflect the prominent national standing of the University's business faculty."

Management program slated

Managers and entrepreneurs from Pacific Northwest businesses and organizations will spend a week on the University campus this summer exploring new directions in marketing, economics, and financial and human resource management.

Top University professors plus five guest faculty will conduct the fourth annual Executive Management Program Aug. 19-24 at the College of Business Administration.

A program fee of $1,350 covers tuition, course materials, lodging and meals for the conference. If no lodging is required, the fee is $1,100. Due to enrollment limitations, preregistration is required by Sunday.

The program is designed for middle- and upper-level managers in large organizations and entrepreneurs in small- and medium-sized companies.

"This program is the Graduate School of Management's response to the critical need for an integrated, adaptive management perspective," James Reinmuth, dean of the business college, said.

Subjects to be studied range from comparative strategies and policies between Japan and the U.S. to evaluating financial performance. Investment planning for the 1980s also will be examined.
