church building is now the home of the Maude Kerns Art Center, at 1910 E. 15th Ave. east of campus. The center was built in 1895 as the Fairmount Presbyterian Church.

The Fifthpearl Building and the Fifth Street Public Market, near the corner of East Fifth Avenue and High Street, are reminders of early Eugene industry. Both buildings are former grain and flour mills. To the west along Fifth Avenue, at Willamette Street, are the city's two early railroad terminal buildings: the Southern Pacific (now Amtrak) depot, built around 1910, and the Oregon

Interested community groups may conduct 2½-hour scenic tours past Eugene's historical buildings with the aid of trained guides, provided by the Junior League of Eugene. Tour Chair Mary Feldman says that groups must provide their own transportation, which may range from a van to a 50-passenger bus.

Groups wishing to reserve tour guides or seeking more information may call Feldman Monday through Friday between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. at 343-4936.

8:30 p.m., and an "aftercare" group, for persons who have been through alcohol and drug treatment programs, meets Wednesdays from 6 p.m. to 7:30 p.m.

Vet Center personnel also are available to University instructors for class presentations on Vietnam-related issues. In addition, Maynard says that the center has a "tremendous" video library on the Vietnam conflict and issues of veteran re-adjustment.

Tice says that the center welcomes drop-in visits by individuals or groups. The center is open Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. and interested persons or groups may phone the center (687-6918) for appointments.

"Nobody has dealt with the Vietnam experience, and I think that the public has a stereotypical view of that experience and its effects on vets' lives," Maynard explains. "In general, there has been a conspiracy of silence around Vietnam vets and their re-adjustment to America."

Maynard, Tice and other members of the Eugene Vet Center staff join with personnel at 136 other Vet Centers nationwide in working to break that silence from Vietnam-era veterans and from society at large.
