Booking it: a shopping guide

Books and students go together. Eugene has several bookstores, too many to list. However, there are a few right around campus that can meet almost any reader's needs.

Now that school's almost here it's time to meander down 13th Avenue to the University Bookstore and pick up all those required readings for all those required classes.

You think lines at registration are long? Prepare yourself. It seems everyone on campus shops at the University Bookstore. The management tries to stock every book the faculty requests in its three-story building on the corner of 13th Avenue and University Street, said Chris Standish, coursebook manager.

Yet, the University Bookstore also stocks rows of pleasure-reading material, plus other school supplies.

In the book department University students can take advantage of a 10 percent discount with the presentation of a validated student card.

In an effort to save money by buying used books, many students try their luck at the Smith Family Bookstore, a couple of blocks west of the University Bookstore at 768 E. 13th. The Smith Family Bookstore buys and sells used books — including textbooks — and many times students find they can save money by utilizing this family-operated store, according to co-owner Misa Smith.

She and her husband Delbert have had the business for ten years, and during that time have accumulated so many books that recently they had to expand. A new section of the store sells only new books.

After an attack of textbook burnout one can seek relief at Paradox Bookstore located at 825 E. 13th.

Another family-operated business, Paradox specializes in psychological self-help books, says owner Patrick Fraleigh. Fraleigh boasts that he and his wife, both owners and both psychologists, have read almost all the books on the shelves which also include sections on women and women's issues, gardening, physical fitness, career planning and spirituality.

If you're looking for a shop that mainly offers spiritual and inspirational reading material, Perlandra Bookstore is the place for you.

The sweet smell of incense and the flowing sounds of Celtic music fill the air as you enter the store at 790 E. 11th. Several sections such as metaphysical, healing, eastern and western religions, astrology, feminism, yoga and "new age information," line the shelves, according to Perlandra employee Cheryl Robinson.

Buried in the stacks of local bookstores you can find bargains just waiting to be dug up.

There are always a few particular outdated books that can't seem to be found anywhere. Try the Book Mark at 856 Olive. The 15-year-old business stocks many older titles plus a lot of new ones, and if they don't have it than they can probably order it for no extra cost, said manager Karen West.

The Book Mark also features at least 20 different newspapers and 650 magazines from around the world, West says.

If you find yourself book-hunting in the late afternoon and feeling that it's time for a spot of tea, head east to Book and Tea located in a remodeled house at 1646 E. 19th.

It offers a "good selection of general books," according to employee Susan Jewett, and a free cup of tea as well. A calm, peaceful atmosphere and strong sections on mystery, fiction, women and children are the highlights of the two-year-old shop.
