

Comic trio charms vicinity

A blend of juggling, singing, gymnastics, vaudeville, political humor and just plain silliness make up an act that has infiltrated the University campus and several local fairs lately.

The group calls itself "Out 2 Lunch," and after viewing this trio, many may agree. But the entertainers will answer to Rhys Thomas, Tim Miller and Kenn Glen.

Attired in pink-and-purple basketball shoes and black-and-white suits with bow ties, the group elegantly acknowledges its audience.

"Greetings and salivations," reels Thomas, the gymnast of the group, standing straddled on both of his partners' shoulders.

Later in the act Glen asks the audience, "Are you suffering from first strike phobia?" in a voice resembling that of a television commercial advertisement. The trio cries out a cure in unison: "Dr. Ronnie's tonic bomb."

The three-man comedy act entitled Out 2 Lunch, made up of Tim Miller (right), Kenn Glen (left) and Rhys Thomas (not shown), have shown area fairs they can do more than just juggle.

Eugene appear amused, chuckling here and there. Thomas says fewer people appreciate the Out 2 Lunch comedy in Portland, less so in Roseburg and not at all in Springfield.

But they still carry on, having progressed from last year's days of practicing downstairs in the EMU, when a letter to the editor in the Emerald referred to them as "those hippy jugglers."

At that time the group was composed of Thomas, Miller and Pete Peterson. Thomas and Miller have been juggling together for the past three years. Peterson left and the newly formed trio gave its first performance at the Country Faire.

"We cut our hair and put on ties so we'd stand out at the Faire," says Thomas. And as they perform each juggler adds his unique style, talent, background and aspirations to the final product.
