levied for 1983-84, whichever is lower. And that is what has local taxing districts worried.

Local taxing districts, such as school districts, county governments and fire districts, are funded primarily from property tax revenues. A cut in the amount levied means a reduction in services, says Tom Doig of the Eugene Education Association, a member of the coalition opposing Measure 2.

But Bornemann said the taxpayers union is calling the bluff of local governments. This version of the measure, "a much more sophisticated version than past property tax relief measures," allows voters to fund any level of government they want, he said.

At issue is the "override clause" of the initiative that allows voters in local districts to override the tax limit and fund a level of services they feel is justified. The only requirement of the override clause is that a majority of the registered voters in the district must approve the clause.

While some complain that voter turnout at local elections is never that high, Bornemann says that only three times since 1968 has there been a statewide election that failed to attract that percentage of voters.

Doig says that past election results show that even when voter turnout is high, people often vote only for one issue that interests them and skip making a decision on the other issues.

The chances of having a 50 percent turnout on any one issue — especially a local issue — makes the override clause of the measure much more difficult than it seems, he said.

Opposition to the measure, such as Doig's, represents only a part of the increased criticism facing the Oregon Taxpayers Union this year, but Bornemann said he is confident that the people want a tax relief measure. Since the Legislature failed to solve the problem in its last session, Measure 2 is their only hope, he says.

Five students sought by ASUO for service on women's panel

By Julie Shippen
Of the Emerald

The ASUO Executive is now seeking five students to serve as members of the 1984-85 Women's Task Force, says ASUO Pres. Julie Davis.

One purpose of the task force will be to identify and deal with important women's issues on campus, including those of safety, child care and the situations of women faculty at the University, she says.

The committee will also provide a way for campus organizations, such as Women's Referral and Resource Service, Rape Crisis Network, Women's Law Forum and others, to work together on women's issues.

The group will also work on broadening the support and planning the format of the Women's Symposium to be held on campus this spring, Davis adds.

Students of all ages and backgrounds are encouraged to apply. The deadline for those interested is Oct. 17. For applications or more information, contact Davis in Suite 4 of the EMU, 686-3724.
