

Behave yourself Friday!

Toy guns and "assassin" or "killer" games will not be welcome on campus during vice-presidential candidate Geraldine Ferraro's visit Friday, and any evidence of either could result in serious consequences for persons involved.

Those admonitions come from a Secret Service agent and a Eugene police officer, who observed students playing a game with toy guns in the EMU at about 2:30 p.m. Wednesday, during a Secret Service advance tour of the campus.

"Things happen real quick and (the Secret Service) takes this real seriously with someone this important," said Sgt. Chuck Tilloy of the Eugene Police Department, referring to the danger of a gun-toting person being subdued or possibly even shot.

Special Agent Thomas Blecha of the Secret Service's Portland office warned of "possible serious injury" to persons carrying weapons or objects resembling weapons during Ferraro's visit.

"Our agents may not be familiar with the "assassin" or "killer" games, and if students are playing the game when Ferraro is around there could be problems," he said. "We don't want a student to get hurt."

Ferraro is scheduled to speak at noon Friday on the EMU east lawn.

Two Northwestern University students who were playing "killer" on the Evanston, Ill. campus were mistaken for gunmen by police officers earlier this month. According to the school's newspaper, the students were ordered at gunpoint to drop their toy weapons and assume positions normally assumed by criminal suspects.

Fly the skies in a Marine fighter plane

Male students interested in aviation will have the opportunity to fly Marine fighter planes and learn a little about the organization's aviation program today and Friday.

Marine fighter pilots will be at Mählön Sweet Airport at 9:30 a.m. to take interested students up for a flight.

"This is just a way for students who are interested in aviation to get their feet off the ground and actually fly a plane," says Capt. B.J. Toynbee, the chief recruiter for the Marines. "We also want to give participants a chance to pick our brains and ask questions about our program."

"We did this last year and had a large group of men who went up. It's a good chance for those who have been interested in the program to find out more about it," Toynbee adds.

There is no charge to participants, and absolutely no commitment to join, he says. Transportation to the airport will be provided.

Interested students should call (collect) the Marine recruitment center in Corvallis at 757-4801. Those who are unable to reach the center can show up at Eugene Flight Services behind the Flight Technology Center at 9:30 a.m. today and Friday.
