The Trawler

Eugene's finest seafood restaurant announces their newest "catch":

The first in Lane County serving Ballard Bitter on Draft

In England, "a pint of bitter" is nothing less than the national beverage. To Americans unfamiliar with the usage, the name might suggest a drink that is acrid or harsh. Ale-lovers know that "bitter" refers to the lively, aromatic hop component of traditional ale brewing. It is remarkably thirst-quenching and satisfying, dry in character but more complex in flavor than American lager beers.

We brew our rendition of this draft style in a small brewery in Ballard, the Scandinavian district of Seattle. We use only barley malt, yeast, water and the finest Pacific Northwest hops: Cascades and clusters from the Yakima Valley, and Fuggles from Oregon. Ballard Bitter is hand-made, fresh and unpasteurized. As the old fisherman says, "Ya, Sure, Ya Betcha."
